House Leaders Fail in Job Plea At White House

House Democrats Ask Him in Vain if Governors Will Have Say.

Uneasy Lest States Will Get Patronage

Steering Group Learns Not Much Will Go for Postoffices.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Congressmen annoyed by fears that governors would outmaneuver them in the scramble for patronage created by the vast works program appealed to President Roosevelt yesterday.

Members of the House Democratic Steering Committee asked Mr. Roosevelt who would administer the $4,880,000,000. They left the White House without receiving any direct assurances.

Mr. Roosevelt spoke enthusiastically of his plans to squeeze the maximum possible number of jobs out of his new depression war chest, but he talked in broad generalities only when the conversation turned to the life-blood of politicians—jobs.

"You know how the President is," one member of the delegation remarked on his return to the Hill.

"He talked until he had everyone in a good humor, but he didn't make any promises. How does that line in Goldsmith's 'Deserted Village' go? 'And fools who came to scoff remained to pray.'"

Some Mutter Mildly.

While one or two members of the committee muttered veiled threats to retaliate by refusing to take orders on future legislation there was no organized movement in that direction.

Broadly speaking, the complaint of the committee was twofold:

1. Will actual administration of the works program be directed from Washington or by Governors, as under the FERA? The Congressmen know the funds will be allocated here. They want the whole set-up to be exclusively Federal because they have little influence with State officials.

2. Will the set-up be such that Congressmen may once more be kept in the dark until allocations have been made? A case in point is that of a member who told constituents the PWA would not approve projects in his district and later learned the grant had been made, but not until after the news reached his home.

Another member who declined to permit the use of his name, protested:

"We want to know who is going to spend the money. We ought to have some say-so on jobs. In the past the States got all the jobs and bouquets and we got all the kicks."

A third committeeman objected:

"The President gave us the rush act. We asked to see him for 45 minutes and got 20 or 25. We were kept standing and he did all the talking. It wouldn't surprise me if some of the fellows around here started using their own heads instead of passing every bill without any change so the President will be pleased. I'm for his program in general, but we ought to get Federal jobs."

Alabama Report Bothersome.

One of the factors which led to the request for the conference was a report on the Hill that Mr. Roosevelt assured Gov. Graves of Alabama he woud be permitted to administer works funds in his State.

The President told his callers they need count on receiving few allocations of postoffices or bridges in their districts. He said only

MRS. WILLIAM R. MAGNA.

D. A. R. Starts Congress Here; 3,300 Present

Politics Off to Tomorrow; Mrs. Margna, Cummings Give Speeches.

With considerable resplendence, the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, opened its forty-fourth continental congress in Constitution Hall last night.

More than 3,300 delegates and alternates—total registration was 3,344 when enrollment closed for the day at 4:30 p. m. yesterday—were crowded into the auditorium when Mrs. Russell William Magna, retiring president general, and her cabinet officers made their ceremonious entrance, escorted by young women pages.

The spirited campaigns being waged by the two candidates for Mrs. Magna's post were sidetracked, at least for the time being, as the congress got under way. Politics will have no place on the program tomorrow, when nominations are made for president general, vice president general and all other national officers.

Optimistic pictures of the general condition of the D. A. R. and the enactment and enforcement of crime laws were drawn for the assembly by Mrs. Magna and Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, respectively, who delivered the only two formal addresses last night.

Reiterates Principles.

"The National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, has stepped front stage," said Mrs. Magna. "Chartered under the United States Government, it entered for the first time upon the scene 44 years ago with but 18 members in the cast.

"It has enriched its settings, enlarged its personnel to 150,000 members, and vitalized its utterances, until today we speak our lines with well-coached tutelage and take our cues with promptness and dispatch."

The society has been "on the right side of the ledger" during the depression years, she said, adding that membership loss has been offset by new enrollment.

"The increase in every department places the question of any increase in national dues into the far-flung future," she said.

Reviewing the principles of the D. A. R., the president general said:

"We stand for national security commensurate with necessity and the many ramifications of security against crime and all subversive forces, intrigue and exploitations. We are world-wide in scope and world affairs are brought to our very doors, but we are organized to make America our main concern.

"We have ever advocated and always will advocate an adequate national preparedness. Adequate national defense on land and sea and in the air is a program to which

White House Backs Bonus Up in Senate

Harrison to Introduce Bond Compromise Proposal Today.

President Will Sign It, Senator Promises; Speeds Hearing.

By Robert C. Albright.

The long-awaited Administration compromise on the soldiers' bonus will be introduced in the Senate today by Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Believed to carry a proposal that would mature the bonus in 1938 and pay off needy veterans before that date in bonds, with proportionate deductions, the measure is designed to head off passage of the Patman "greenback" bonus bill, which already has passed the House.

Senator Harrison, who discussed its terms with the President Sunday, was noncommittal on its provisions yesterday.

"But I will say this," he told reporters, "if the Senate passes the bill I introduce, the President will sign it."

Expects Early Action.

The President previously had flatly threatened to veto either the Patman bill, sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, or the Vinson bill, championed by the American Legion, which leaves financing of the $2,200,000,000 bonus up to the Treasury.

Early Senate action on a bonus bill was forecast by Harrison, who will hold two-day hearings on the measure, probably starting Monday, after his committee's NRA extension hearings are concluded.

To Oppose Pension.

The bill is expected to carry a stipulation that whatever bonus settlement is made be considered payment of the World War veterans "in full." This would be designed to discourage a drive for general pensions, which the President fears will follow passage of a bonus bill.

Whether or not such a provision is enacted into law, members of the Senate bonus bloc pointed out that it could amount to nothing more than a declaretion of policy, and, as such, would not necessarily be binding on any future Congress.

It was reported that the bill to be introduced by Harrison today would move up the date of the 20-year adjusted service certificates from 1925 to the date of the Armistice signing in 1918, making them payable in full in 1938.

The plan is reputed to embody certain features of both the Thomas bill, providing for maturity of the bonus in 1937, and the Tydings plan, calling for payment of the bonus in 1945 in bonds. Veterans who preferred to hold onto their certificates, for their insurance value, could do so. In one quarter it was said the plan would cost the Treasury only $700,000,000, with interest savings, resulting from moving up the maturity date, figuring prominently in the estimate.

If the Senate adopts such a plan, it must still go to conference with the House, where still further compromises could be effected, more closely in line with the Patman bill.

If bonus sentiment in the Senate is strong enough to reject a compromise, and enact a straight cash bonus bill, a presidential veto is assured. Spokesmen for veterans organizations are confident the House would pass the bill over a veto, but are not assured they could get a two-thirds vote in the Senate.

Murder, Suicide Laid To Husband's Jealousy

New Bern, N. C., April 15 (AP).—Veston Broughton, 35, superintendent of Dozier plantation in Pamlico County, and Ernest Brite, 30, a tenant, were shot to death at Brite's home today in what Sheriff E. C. Brinson said was a homicide and suicide caused by Brite's jealousy over his wife.

Brinson quoted Mrs. Brite as saying her husband shot Broughton with a shotgun about 7 a. m. as the plantation superintendent was leaving the Brite home and then came into the house, got a .45-calibre pistol and fired a shot into the fallen man's head.

Mrs. Brite and her two children fled the house as Brite started back to it.

5-and-10 Scion Tells Actress His Love Flies

Woolworth Donahue, on Phone Picks Financee Who Denies It.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 15.—A curious romantic mixup brought conflicting statements today from a movie actress and a socially prominent New York girl whose names have been linked with that of Woolworth Donahue, dapper cousin of Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani and heir to a share of the vast Woolworth fortune.

Miss Wendie Barrie, English actress now in Hollywood, said Donahue telephoned her from Palm Beach, Fla., to ask permission to announce his engagement to Dorothy Fell, Manhattan society girl.

But Miss Fell, in New York, vigorously denied she would marry Donahue.

"I guess he called up Miss Barrie to tell her he was engaged to me so that she would stop telling people she was engaged to him," said Miss Fell.

"I assure you I have no intention whatever of marrying him."

Miss Barie said Donahue informed her that he was in love with Miss Fell. Previously, there have been reports the young Woolworth heir and the English actress were engaged.

"Mr. Donahue asked me if I wanted to talk to Miss Fell," Miss Barrie said. "But there was nothing I could say beyond giving him my sincere hopes for happiness. I didn't speak to the girl."

The engagement of Miss Fell to Donahue was announced September 27, 1933, by Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Livingston Mills. Mrs. Mills is the mother of Miss Fell.

On January 7, 1934, it was announced that the engagement was broken and April 12, 1934, Donahue sailed for Africa to hunt specimens for the American Museum of Natural History.

Police Ready to Drop Search for Mrs. Gordon

Farmington, Conn., April 15 (AP). Chief of Police Nathan W. Fuller tonight said that the general search for Mrs. Andrew Gordon, 25-year-old attractive society matron, would be abandoned within the next 24 hours, if she is not found.

He asserted a police investigation of all clews would continue, however, for the socially prominent mother of a daughter born in January. Mrs. Gordon has been missing for five days.

Death Attributed to "Greens."

Peoria, Ill., April 15 (AP).—Mrs. Lena Swanson, 55, died today and her daughter, Alberta, 29, was critically ill of poisoning attributed to "greens" eaten at dinner yesterday. Mrs. Swanson cooked what she believed to be rhubarb leaves. An autopsy was ordered.

Eccles Bares $90,000 Loss For U. S. Job

Glass Quiz of Federal Reserve Head Fails in Fireworks.

Utahan Offers to Resign Bank Post for Senate Confirmation.

By Robert C. Albright.

Marriner S. Eccles, former Utah group banker and business man, yesterday appeared before a Senate Banking sub-committee and laid down his credentials as governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Across the table sat Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, former Secretary of the Treasury, father and zealous protector of Federal Reserve system.

Dourly he questioned the witness; calmly he received his replies. Then he called his sub-committee to meet today to decide whether Mr. Eccles had met the test. There was no visible indication that he thought so. But the Administration counts enough votes in the Senate to approve Eccles' qualifications.

The chairman of the Federal Reserve Board has never been confirmed by the Senate. His monetary and legislative policies, as espoused particularly in the Eccles bill to centralize Federal Reserve Board control over banking and credit, have crystalized a solid little Senate opposition bloc, led by Glass.

Mr. Eccles told the Senators he took a "loss" of $90,870 to become governor of the Federal Reserve Board; that it cost him that amount to dispose of his interest in the First Security Corporation of Utah and get out of the banking business.

He sold his holdings to the Eccles Investment Co., of which he is still a director and stockholder but over which he no longer has active direction, he told the sub-committee. That company, dealing in lumber, sugar, railways, industrials, etc., is now run by his brothers, he said.

No Clashes; No Outbursts.

The Eccles Investment Co. owns 10 per cent interest in the Utah Construction Co., which contracts for private and Government engineering work and was one of six companies which bid on Boulder Dam, he stated. He was active in organization work leading up to the bidding.

Dapper and businesslike, he answered questioning, outwardly composed except for some dallying with pencil and pad and reference to memos.

Senator Glass phrased his questions in a low voice, to the point. This was an opportunity he had awaited for months; he knew what he wanted to find out. But his words were reserved, to the point of restraint. There were no verbal clashes, no fiery outbursts.

Questioning Insistent.

"Have you disposed of all of your bank stock?" asked the Virginian.

"I have," replied the witness.

"Was it a bona fide sale?"

"Yes."

"Without reservation?"

"Yes."

"Do you regard the First Security Corporation as a banking institution?"

"I do."

"Do you still have any stock in that corporation?"

"I have not."

Senator Glass brought out that 15 per cent of the funds of the Eccles Investment Co. are in the First Security Corporation.

Pressed on his connection with the Eccles Investment Co., the Federal Reserve Board governor said:

"I take no part in the management of the company but leave that to my brothers. If the committee considers there is anything improper in my retaining a nominal position with the Eccles Investment Co., I shall be glad to resign it."

Quizzed on RFC Loans.

Governor Eccles explained that the Eccles Investment Co. was organized two decades ago to manage assets of his father's estate in the interest of his father's widow and nine children. He said he owned less than 9 per cent of the stock of the company; that it has had no business transactions with the Government.

Britain Will Use Force To Stop War Abroad; Plot to Kill Duce Fails

Britain Balances New Budget But Dodges U. S. Debt Again

Four Billion to Be Spent, With Large Part for Armed Defense.

By the United Press.

London, April 15.—Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain today presented to Great Britain a $4,000,000,000 balanced budget for 1935-36, completely ignoring Britain's $4,000,000,000 war debt to the United States, and revealing that a large part of the expenditures would be for armed defense.

The thin-lipped guardian of the treasury at the same time threw a sop to the populace by restoring government employes' pay cuts, effective July 1, and reducing income taxes in the lower brackets. There is a general election next years.

His budget speech to Parliament therefore was surprisingly buoyant. Chamberlain told the empire that "Britain has recovered 80 per cent of her prosperity." He produced one of the most adroit budgets in years, practically balanced, showing a surplus of 500,000 pounds $2,425,000)—and with virtually all favors distributed to the poor.

Budget Figures Itemized.

The chancellor's estimates for the fiscal year now under way, including such self-sustaining items as the postoffice, follow:

Revenues, £824,770,000 ($4,000,134,500).

Expenditures, £824,427,000 ($3,997,709,500).

Surplus, £500,000 ($2,425,000).

A financial statement issued simultaneously showed the British debt to the United States as $4,386,000,000, equal at par to 897,534,000 pounds sterling. But as expected, Chamberlain made no reference to this obligation.

James Maxton, Laborite, in a speech on the Chamberlain budget, ironically commented: "The question of the American debt has gone into that very nice category where it no longer needs be mentioned. That is a very satisfactory way of dealing with our external debts.

"I hope we always will be able to deal with them in the same efficient

Ickes Defends Spending; Sees 'Morale' Saved

'We Won't Be Defeatists,' Secretary Declares, Answering Critics.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Philadelphia, April 15.—Declaring "it is more important in these times to preserve the morale of the people than it is to balance a set of books," Secretary Ickes came to the defense of Government expenditures here today.

Stepping out of character as the most cautious of the Administration spenders, Ickes attacked the idea of those who insist that the Federal budget must be balanced at any cost. He particularly criticized the theories of Lewis W. Douglas, former Director of the Budget.

The talk was made before the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania, where Douglas spoke a month ago.

Ickes declared that neither individuals nor corporations attempted to live on their incomes and not draw on their reserves when disaster overtook them.

No longer do you have an income to support you, but happily when you were able to work and had work to do, you laid something aside. It is your reasonable expectation that your unemployment will be only temporary.

"In such circumstances, what do you do? Do you heroically say to yourself 'Since I have no income I will not eat? I will not call in a doctor? I refuse to unbalance my budget? I firmly decline to cut down my surplus in the savings bank? I am chock full of the old virtues? I prefer to die heroically

French Thwart Assassins' Plot To Kill Il Duce

Three Anarchists Seized, Geneva Session Is Put Under Heavy Guard.

By the United Press.

Geneva, April 15.—A wholesale assassination plot, with Benito Mussolini and high diplomats of three other countries the intended victims, was revealed today.

French police reported to Geneva authorities the arrest of three anarchists at Marseille, charged with plotting to kill the Italian premier at the Stresa peace conference last week, and, failing in this objective, to assassinate Foreign Minister Pierre Laval of France, Foreign Minister Eduard Benes of Czechoslovakia and Foreign Minister Nicholas Titulescu of Rumania during the current league council meeting at Geneva.

Swiss police immediately redoubled precautions to safeguard these and other statesmen here for the extraordinary council session on German re-armament. Patrols along the frontier and in Geneva were reinforced, and the delegates were heavily guarded as they went to and from their hotels and the conference hall.

Swiss authorities were inclined to believe the plot reports exaggerated, but for safety's sake left nothing undone to prevent such a tragedy as occurred when King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou of France were shot in Marseille last October.

Subsequent advices tonight said the suspects had been arrested elsewhere than Marseille. Those arrested were said to include Rudolph Gundscher, an Italian anarchist, and Eda Caroni, a woman accomplice.

Mussolini possibly heard of a plot prior to the Stresa conference with British and French statesmen last week, for when they arrived for a

In Geneva, the smaller powers acted to save Germany from rebuke by larger nations. A plot to assassinate Mussolini and Laval at Stresa was revealed. Turkey startled the conference by seeking the right to arm the Dardanelles.

In Poland, one was killed and scores injured in a series of anti-German riots.

In London, active peace moves by Britain were anticipated in the wake of the Stresa parley and league council session.

Geneva, April 15.—Turkey startled delegates to the extraordinary league council session on German re-armament tonight by demanding the right to re-fortify the Dardanelles in Asia Minor if other defeated nations are allowed to return to arms equality.

The declaration was one of a number of swiftly occurring incidents marking the initial council session which added to the uncertainty and uneasiness in Europe.

Others included:

1. Denmark and Poland frankly opposed France's demand for sharp criticism of Germany in a resolution attacking the Reich's re-armament program.

2. Britain was reported ready to give France prime assistance if Germany violates the demilitarized Rhineland zone. An authoritative source put this interpretation on the Anglo-Italian reaffirmation of their guarantee of peace in western Europe under the Locarno treaty of 1925.

Action Postponed.

3. The council postponed action on Germany, devoting the initial session to arranging arbitration of the Italian-Abyssinian border dispute in East Africa.

4. The Little Entente and Balkan Entente nations in southeastern Europe issued a communique tonight after secret conferences, guardedly approving the "Big Three" Stresa accords for unity of action against further unilateral denunciation of treaty obligations, thus censuring Germany's action.

Their communique "noted with satisfaction the effort just accomplished" at Stresa, and emphasized that these states "attach special importance to the imminent conclusion of treaties of mutual assistance in northeastern Europe.

These ententes include Roumania, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Greece and Turkey.

The startling Turkish assertion was voiced by the Turkish delegate, Tewfik Rushdi Aras, who also is chairman of the council. He told the French at luncheon that Turkey also is a vanquished nation, and hence has the same rearmament rights as Germany, Austria or Bulgaria.

French Optimistic.

The French remained optimistic tonight that their memoranium on German rearmament would not be altered.

Foreign Minister Pierre Laval revealed that he had succeeded in gaining reluctant support from the Little Entente nations to the Stresa proposal permitting Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria to rearm. This was one bright spot in a disconcerting day for diplomats of Britain, France and Italy.

The general interpretation of Britain's readiness to join Italy in military assistance to France in case Germany violates the demilitarized zone caused the first major stir during the day.

British sources frankly admitted that England now is ready to intervene to safeguard the Rhineland zone as a buffer area against war—

Dun & Bradstreet Retracts Forecast

Optimism of LastWeek Not Justified, Head Says.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 15.—Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., in a statement issued today over the signature of A. D. Whiteside, president, characterized as "inadvertent and unauthorized" the highly optimistic business forecast which appeared in its weekly trade review of Friday.

While Whiteside's statement did not specifically name the subject matter which the firm wished to retract, it was assumed that he was referring to the following paragraph in the review:

"During the week there was a complete transformation of sentiment, as the hopes for a rather far-removed improvement were replaced by a realization that the immediate future is to bring the sharpest rise that has been witnessed in business in the past quarter of a century."

In his correction Whiteside said: "No significant information justified the inadvertent and unauthorized departure from our policy of not making predictions as to the future business 'trend, which was evidenced in our 'weekly review of business' released under date of April 12, 1935."

Siam's Boy King Uses Power, Escapes Swiss School Exam

By the Associated Press.

Lausanne, Switzerland, April 15.—His Majesty King Ananda Mahidol of Siam, youngest monarch in the world and future ruler of 12,000,000 people, used his royal prerogatives for the first time today and got out of a tough examination in school.

Instead of being just another anxious-eyed schoolboy nibbling his pencil and pondering questions on a test paper, the 9-year-old sovereign stayed away from the classroom while his schoolmates were struggling with their problems.

The director of schools in the Lausanne district, at the queen mother's request, excused Ananda from the required examination and automatically promoted him to the "classical college," a course equivalent to high school in the United States.

The Siamese delegation here also joined in the request, which was heeded "in view of Ananda's excellent record and his high personality."

Ananda's little brother and his 11-year-old sister, however, took the examination, the brother passing second in his class, while the sister also did well.

Ananda, with his mother, was expected to leave shortly on the last voyage overseas to Bangkok for the coronation ceremonies which will place him on the Asiatic throne recently abandoned by his uncle, Prajadhipok, who foresook sovereignty for the bucolic quiet of his country manor in Surrey, England.

Ananda will return to Switzerland for two more years of schooling, immediately after the corona-

Poles Revolt Against Germans; Blood Spilled in Corridor Riots

By the Associated Press.

Neustadt, Polish Corridor, April 15.—One was killed and scores injured today as anti-German riots swept the Polish corridor. Poles believe Germany seeks to regain the strip which separates Germany from East Prussia.

Hundreds of Poles assaulted German-speaking citizens in one of the worst outbreaks of anti-Nazi hatred since Adolf Hitler came into power.

Fritz Groen died of a beating at Kleinkatz, near Zoppot. His father, Hermann Groen, was believed dying.

Trouble at Kleinkatz reportedly sprang from propaganda among the Polish population that Nazis during the recent Danzig elections beat 45 Poles.

Polish authorities expressed regret and sought to quell the uprisings.

In Neustadt, center of the violence, 3,000 of the 10,000 inhabitants are German.

The riots occured here when several hundred Poles led by the burgomaster paraded through the streets in a violent demonstration against the German minority in this erstwhile German territory.

Shots were fired. Hundreds of windows were smashed. Germans were dragged into the streets and beaten.

Hearing Bares Mellon's Link To Steel Deal

Bethlehem's Acquisition of McClintic-Marshall Is Aired at Tax Probe.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, April 15.—The Government was enabled through a ruling today at Andrew W. Mellon's tax hearing to dig into records of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation relating to the acquisition of the McClintic-Marshall Corporation in 1931.

Mellon owned 30 per cent of McClintic-Marshall's stock, and the Government contends he evaded approximately $1,000,000 in taxes by claiming the acquisition of the concern's assets by Bethlehem was a merger and not a sale.

In his direct case, Frank J. Hogan, counsel for Mellon, produced contracts between the two concerns, but Government Counsel Fred R. Shearer argued "it was not what they promised to do, but what actually was done that counts."

This was made in reply to Hogan's objection when Shearer asked R. B. Schlottman, assistant comptroller of Bethlehem, regarding some book entries after February 10, when Bethlehem acquired McClintic-Marshall.

Supreme Court Ruling Cited.

Hogan pleaded that what entries Bethlehem Steel had made on its books after consummation of the contract could not be held against Mellon and asserted that the Supreme Court of the United States has so held in similar cases.

Ernest H. Van Fossan, presiding member of the Tax Appeals Board, ruled:

"The theory of the Government is that the entire picture does not appear in the contracts themselves; that even though it was conceded that the transaction possibly came within the definition as it appears in the statute, it is claimed that they do not show the entire story, or the entire picture. * * * We believe that, consistent with the theory of the Government's case, they should have the right to show how the parties treated the transaction."

The first evidence after the ruling was an entry on the books of Bethlehem's McClintic-Marshall Corporation of Pennsylvania (the old one had been a Delaware concern).

Stocks and Bonds Listed.

Under the heading, "a record of the purchase of the properties acquired from Bethlehem Steel," the entry listed 240,000 shares of Bethlehem's common stock and $8,200,000 of bonds which were paid for the properties.

The list valued the common stock at $18,417,246 and the preferred at par, making a total value of $26,617,246. On a basis of stock market prices at the time of the merger, McClintic-Marshall stockholders received approximately $21,000,000, the evidence has shown.

"It states it is a purchase, but it is incorrect," interjected the witness.

Again Hogan objected on the ground that reports of intercompany balances could mean nothing to the board. He again was overruled to permit Shearer to develop his points.

Credit Entry Stressed.

Credit entry of $540,000 which Schlottman said reflected an interest adjustment as of October 1, 1930, with the old McClintic-Marshall Corporation, of Delaware, was stressed by Shearer.

The witness said this represented dividends paid by Bethlehem on the 240,000 shares of common stock to its subsidiary, Bethlehem Mines, between October 1, 1930, and the merger in February, 1931.

The Bethlehem books showed that $180,000 of this was paid in December, 1930, to the Bethlehem Mines, which turned it over to the Bethlehem Steel Co. of Pennsylvania, and that in turn handed it to McClintic-Marshall of Pennsylvania, and then to stockholders of the old McClintic-Marshall of Delaware.

U. S. Contentions Noted.

The Government has theorized that the McClintic-Marshall-Bethlehem deal actually was agreed upon in October, 1930, on everything but details.

Along this line, the Government has contended that when the Union Construction Co. was formed December 30, 1930, taking $44,000,000 of the McClintic-Marshall assets, it was but one step in completion of a "sale" of assets which Bethlehem wanted to acquire.

The payment of the interest, therefore, Shearer contended, was an important link to his case. He asked the witness why such an entry was made on Bethlehem books prior to the time it acquired McClintic-Marshall.

"McClintic-Marshall did business and had an open account with Bethlehem before it became a subsidiary," said Schlottman.

Talmadge Denies South Is 'Radical'

Georgian Hits Brain Trust for 'Smoke Screen.'

By the Associated Press.

Murphy, N. C., April 15.—Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia, often a critic of the national Administration, came into this city just across the State line today to address a good roads meeting and to fire new blasts at "some of the brain trusters in Washington."

The chief executive said some of the "brain trusters" are saying "they are going to help protect this country from the radicals. I never heard of honest, hard-working people being termed that before. They mean the people of the South.

"It's a pretty good plan for those who know they are entirely radical to try to switch their shadow and throw up a smoke screen.

"The Southern people they are talking about didn't advocate plowing up cotton and killing hogs and burning grain fields."

Disillusioning Moffett; FHA Complications; The Pulaski Veto; Propaganda Slip.

By Raymond Clapper

JAMES A. MOFFETT, rich young former Standard Oil official, is retiring as Federal housing administrator, convinced undoubtedly that being a high-powered executive in private business is one thing and holding a major executive post in public life is quite another.

Moffett inherited wealth, prestige and a chance in the oil business from his father, but in addition to that he displayed exceptional ability to stand on his own feet and rise in one of the toughest of all industries.

But he found that many of the methods he had used as an executive were useless in the political atmosphere of Washington. Accustomed to pushing buttons and operating with the unquestioned authority of a business executive, he discovered in the hornswoggling turmoil here that he should have brought a rhinoceros hide along. It takes a special combination to stand up under the heady wine of Washington publicity and fair-weather friends, to know just where the heartbreak pitfalls are, and to work long hours filled with the unrelenting cross-pull of many conflicting interests.

* * * *

Moffett's personal story is that of many men who step from a successful business career into public life. One of the most brilliant successes in this respect was the late Dwight Morrow. It is difficult for them, especially in this Administration, where, in addition to the confusion and growing complexity of rapidly expanding Federal activities, so much influence is exerted by men of a totally different type and outlook—men like Hopkins, Ickes, Wallace and Tugwell. Business executives complain that they find it hard to get good men who have the right combination of qualities and training. It is even more difficult to get good men for public executive posts.

* * * *

Moffett's retirement may afford satisfaction to blown-in-the-bottle New Dealers, but it emphasizes the lack of key men in the Administration who tie back into the business world. That this should be so at a time when the Federal Government's relations with private business are more intimate and more complex than ever before makes this deficiency all the more serious.

* * * *

Statistics are offered to show the accomplishments of the Housing Administration, but the impression throughout most of Washington is that, whatever the reasons, it has fallen far short of earlier hopes.

Primarily, the housing act was conceived to unleash millions of private capital for home building by empowering the Government to insure mortgages up to 80 per cent of the value of the property. By throwing Government insurance behind such loans, it was thought private capital would be attracted. By allowing mortgages up to 80 per cent, it was thought borrowers who object to the high rates and frequent racketeering in second mortgages might be more willing to undertake to build homes.

New Dealers were strong for this legislation. They foresaw a huge volume of home building, moving of families from tenements into neat little dwellings of their own, stimulation of capital goods industries, re-employment in the building trades and great social benefits. An effort was made to put a New Dealer in charge. Corrington Gill, a right-hand man of Hopkins, was strongly urged for the post. Instead, a business man, Moffett, was placed in charge.

He started out with a quick promotional campaign for home repair and renovizing. While there was great activity, this was regarded as only a minor phase of the housing program. New construction was the real object. Results there have been disappointing, but in recent weeks have shown signs of a pick-up.

Banks and insurance companies have been slow to advance money under insured mortgages, one reason being that many of them are loaded up with mortgages on existing homes and do not wish to encourage further building until these are cleared. Many State laws had to be changed. Nevertheless, New Dealers became increasingly impatient. Pressure was put on Moffett. One story is that recently he took hard-boiled Jesse Jones to New York with him, where the riot act was read to three prominent life insurance heads.

Not long ago Secretary Ickes suggested the Government go into home building on a low-interest, low-cost basis. He may have thought that this suggestion might help jar loose private investment and bring it into play to head off such a program. But if he had any such purpose it failed to register with Moffett, who took it the other way and indignantly declared that the Ickes proposal would knock the packing out of the private building program he was seeking to encourage. Moffett might have used this proposal to his advantage.

To some it seems significant that Moffett leaves just as the work program is being launched with the Hopkins school riding high. Undoubtedly, great pressure will be exerted again to put one of this group in charge of FHA, so that he can play ball with the vast spending machine now being organized and jockey private capital into action.

But there's one cold fact that causes trouble here. Building costs have not come down in proportion to rents. Net rental income, according to the National Industrial Conference Board, dropped 48 per cent in the last decade, while building costs dropped only 21 per cent. That means low return on money invested in building. Until rents rise or building costs decline, private capital is likely to be hesitant, in the opinion of these analysts.

These things certainly get complicated.

In one short veto message yesterday rejecting the resolution to set aside October 11 of each year as Gen. Pulaski's memorial day, President Roosevelt brought to naught an unbelievable amount of agitation to honor this Revolutionary hero.

More than half of the State Legislatures have adopted resolutions urging a Pulaski memorial day. For weeks the Congressional Record has been laden with resolutions adopted by Polish societies, city councils and other groups. Five resolutions were offered in Congress. As a gesture to the Polish vote, one of them was adopted. If Mr. Roosevelt had approved it the next thing would have been agitation for holidays for Lafayette, Steuben, Rochambeau and the rest of Gen. Washington's foreign aids.

Before long there wouldn't be any plain working days left.

When a cog slips in a propaganda campaign, you never can tell what will happen.

The White House received 150 letters from New York and Brooklyn a few days ago. All were identical and protested against Senate Bill 807. This proved to be a bill granting an honorary Army discharge to a war-time Y. M. C. A. secretary. However, the letters were intended, as the context indicated, to protest against Senate Bill 1807, which carried the AAA amendments.

Whoever prepared the letters had accidentally dropped one numeral. AAA officials checked the New York and Brooklyn directories and found the signers included janitors, porters, clerks and officials of a New York textile corporation.

Convicts Tell Of Self-Injury To End Torture

Texas Probers Hear Tales of Maiming to Escape Alleged Brutality.

By the Associated Press.

Angleton, Tex., April 15.—Convicts on crutches hobbled before legislative investigators today with gruesome stories of having maimed themselves to ecape the alleged brutality of guards at the Retrieve State Prison Farm near here.

The session, in which a special prison committee of the Texas House of Representatives interviewed some half-dozen prisoners in launching a probe of the brutality charges, was closed to outsiders.

Names of the convicts were not disclosed. They remained before the committee for from 30 minutes to an hour each. Committeemen refused to permit the prisoners to be questioned afterward.

Secrecy "Necessary."

"I am generally against executive sessions," said Kenneth McCalla, of Houston, committee head, "but in this case, if we are to get to the bottom of this thing, the convicts will have to be questioned alone."

Farm officials, however, said one of the convicts questioned had injected kerosene into an injured leg to cause infection and that others had cut themselves about the legs.

The investigation was ordered after two State prison board members had reported prisoners mutilated themselves by cutting off arms and legs because they feared guards would kill them if they went into the fields to work.

Capt. I. K. Kelly, head of the farm for the last six years, said the convicts merely were looking for sympathy. He said a score had maimed themselves during the last two years—several since talk of a legislative investigation was heard.

Kelly Defended.

Arriving today, the investigators were met by a citizens' committee which, while saying any investigation was welcomed, defended Capt. Kelly and said he has "the interest of the convicts at heart."

The committee pointed out that the most hardened convicts in the Texas prison system were sent to Retrieve.

Among these prisoners in the past was Clyde Barrow, late phantom killer, credited with starting the maiming practice by shopping off his toes to escape work.

Post May Retire The Winnie Mae

Hints He Will Use a New Ship in Future Flights.

Lafayette, Ind., April 15.—Wiley Post apparently is on the verge of retiring the Winnie Mae, the ship which twice carried him around the world, from further transcontinental speed records.

"I don't think I'll make another attempt at a transcontinental stratospheric flight with my present equipment, and I'm tired of trying to make landings without a landing gear," Post said.

A broken supercharger ended his flight in Lafayette, 1,900 miles from Burbank, Calif., where he soared into the sky yesterday morning, dropped his landing gear to the ground and headed eastward. Post, still suffering from a cold, indicated today he does not intend to abandon his speed efforts in the stratosphere.

Parents' Murder Laid to Youth, 18

Boy Accused of Setting Fire to Their Bodies.

By the Associated Press.

Woodward, Okla., April 15.—Russell Boley, 18-year-old college student, was charged today with shooting his parents and firing their home southeast of here after pouring gasoline over the bodies.

He entered a plea of not guilty and his preliminary hearing was set for Friday.

T. C. Davis, State crime bureau operative, said "a love affair—in which the parents' objections figured—apparently resulted in the deaths."

The father and mother were shot with a 16-gauge shotgun. Their home was found in flames by neighbors, who discovered the charred bodies.

McCarter Hits Government.

Newark, N. J., April 15 (AP).—The Roosevelt Administration's attack on the public utility industry was described today by Thomas N. McCarter, president of the Public Service Corporation, as "unprovoked, vicious and unfair."

McCarter voiced his criticism at the annual stockholders' meeting.

Leaders Unite 3,500,000 Men On Work-Relief

Cooperation of A. F. of L. With Those Heretofore on Doles Is Aim.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 15.—Organization of an army of 3,500,000 to be employed on the Government's $4,800,000,000 work-relief program—with the American Federation of Labor and unemployment groups co-operating—was announced today by David Lasser, unemployment leader.

He said groundwork for co-operation among those to be employed in private industry and those on relief had been laid at conferences with William Green, president of the A. F. of L.

Lasser, national chairman of the Workers Alliance of America and active head of the Workers Employment Union, said many of the new relief workers would become eligible for membership in A. F. of L. unions and that others could join the unemployment groups.

Objectives of the co-operating groups would be the union scale for all skilled workers, a minimum of $30 a week for unskilled and collective bargaining on all work-relief projects.

Lasser quoted the following telegram he received from Green:

"I am of the opinion that co-operation should prevail among the unemployed organizations and the city central bodies and State Federations of Labor for the purpose of protecting and preserving wage standards, hours of labor and conditions of employment on public works and public relief projects.

"I will urge the closest co-operation among the organized units referred to, so that the interests of both employed and unemployed may be protected and advanced."

It was said the unemployed and those on work relief already have a national organization, which claims 450,000 members in many States.

Moffett Asks To Be Released As FHA Chief

Roosevelt, However, Wants Official to Consider Before Resigning.

James A. Moffett, Federal Housing administrator, yesterday expressed to President Roosevelt his desire to retire within the next two weeks and received the reply to come back before he submited his resignation to talk things over.

Mr. Moffett is going ahead with plans for a trip to the Orient, however, and indicated he expects little difficulty in obtaining his release. The administrator said he wished to retire now that the FHA has been organized and is daily gaining momentum.

In substantiation of this, Mr. Moffett said he reported to the President that yesterday was the "biggest day" the FHA has had so far. Reports for the day indicated, he said, that $1,261,000 of mortgages had been insured, while the insurance total of modernization loans was $750,000.

The average of insured mortgages was $500,000 each day last week, he said, adding that daily figures may exceed $1,000,000 this week. About 30 per cent of the mortgages are for new construction. A total of $138,000,000 in mortgage applications is now on hand, he said.

Mr. Moffett termed the housing act "one of the greatest pieces of legislation ever turned out." He added, later in the day, that he estimates at least $1,500,000,000, and perhaps $2,500,000,000, in construction will be generated by the FHA, eventually.

Meantime, some thought is being given in official quarters to the possibility of merging the FHA with the HOLC, which refinances home mortgages. Asked about this as chairman of the interdepartmental loan committee, Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau would comment only:

"We are always studying these agencies with the view to making them more efficient."

Texas Rangers Called In Onion Farm Strike

Laredo, Tex., April 15 (AP).—Five Texas rangers joined local officers tonight in preserving peace and keeping highways open as an onion workers strike threatened to ruin a large spring crop.

Adjt. Gen. Carl Nesbitt ordered the rangers here today after officials appealed to State authorities to help curb a situation that had "gone beyond control of local officers."

Nearly 2,000 onion workers, demanding higher wages and better working conditions, have been engaged in peaceful picketing.

"J. R. Steelman, conciliator of the Department of Labor, was attempting to negotiate between strikers and growers.

Cold Wind Blows Mournful Note as Williamsport Holds Crash Rites.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Williamsport, Md., April 15.—Hearses continued to rumble through this sorrowing little town today, as six more of the 14 victims of the Rockville grade-crossing tragedy were borne to the grave.

The weather during the forenoon matched the mournful mood of the populace. A cold wind swept through Williamsport and intermittent showers fell as if in a requiem.

Tonight 8 of the 14 high school boys and girls who died Thursday night when their bus collided with a locomotive at Rockville had been buried. Four more will be buried tomorrow and the remaining two Wednesday.

Priests Take Part.

From Rockville this morning came two Catholic priests—the Rev. Cecil J. O'Neil and the Rev. Charles R. O'Hara—in front of whose home the crash took place. Here in St. Augustine's Catholic Church they joined in the services for one of the victims—Margaret Eva Zimmerman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. I. M. Zimmerman.

The church was crowded to the doors and hundreds stood outside while the Rev. T. D. Reinhart, pastor, said the requiem mass and Father O'Hara reviewed the tragedy.

The Rockville priest, who gave the last rites of his church to many of the students after they had been flung almost to his doorstep, said he hoped the crash would emphasize the necessity of eliminating grade crossings.

Mourners' Car in Crash.

From St. Augustine's Church, the body of the Zimmerman girl, trailed by hundreds of automobiles, was borne to Rest Haven Cemetery at Hagerstown.

A collision marked the passage of the cortege through Hagerstown. A beer truck, emerging from a side street, struck the car of Charles Markel bearing members of the town council of Williamsport. None was hurt.

In the course of the day, one funeral followed another, and the townsfolk, so far as they were able, made an appearance at each.

Services for Bertha Castle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roth Castle, were held in the Zion Lutheran Church. The Rev. W. C. Huddle, her pastor, took his text from the Twenty-third Psalm, and told how God, like the shepherds leading their sheep, often takes his children over rough and thorny paths to a place of shelter and safety.

Rites at Winters Home.

The funeral of Lois Winters was held from the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Winters, and that of Norris Downs, jr., from the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Downs. The Rev. W. C. Huddle preached the sermon at both.

From the Downs home, the townsfolk went to the United Brethren Church, where services were held for Elva Harsh, daughter of Beall Harsh, of Roanoke, Va. The Rev. W. M. Beatty, assisted by the Rev. K. G. Newell and the Rev. Mr. Huddle, conducted the service.

The sixth funeral of the day was that of Claude Myers, which was held at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Mary Winters. The Rev. Mr. Huddle was in charge at this, too.

LeRoy Kendle and Claude Brindle were buried yesterday.

School Memorial Tomorrow.

Tomorrow funeral services will be held for Paul McElroy and Pearl Emerson in the morning and for Virginia Myers and Mary Louise Downs in the afternoon.

Wednesday morning will see the funerals of Phoebe Kelly and James Flurie. In the afternoon memorial services for all 14 victims will be held in the high school auditorium.

Mayor Richard G. Hawken today issued a proclamation requesting that all business in the town and its environs be suspended from noon until 6 p. m. He will preside at the memorial service.

Gov. and Mrs. Harry W. Nice have sent the following message to the parents of those children killed in the crash:

"I extend my profound sympathy, and in this Mrs. Nice, herself a mother, joins me. It is the fervent hope of both of us that an all-wise God in His wisdom will give you sustaining strength in this your dark hour of trial."

It was announced that, due to Good Friday and Easter Monday, the schools would remain closed until Tuesday.

Clipper Set for Hop To Hawaii Today

Craft Is Trail Blazer of Line to Orient.

By the Associated Press.

Alameda, Calif., April 15.—Trail blazer of a commercial air line to the Orient, the Pan-American Clipper will begin a 2,400-mile flight to Hawaii at 4 p. m. (Pacific standard time) tomorrow, unless an unforeseen postponement occurs.

The 19-ton flying boat went aloft today on the final test flight of a series which engineers said had thoroughly proved the accuracy of a new radio compass.

In command of the four-motored amphibian will be Edwin C. Musick, veteran aviator, who has been named captain of the first flight to inaugurate an 8,500-mile transport service between the United States and the Orient.

The Clipper's regular crew is composed of Musick, who has spent 22 years in aviation; R. O. D. Sullivan, veteran pilot and second in command; Victor A. Wright, engineering officer; Fred J. Noonan, navigation officer; Harry R. Canaday, junior flight officer, and W. Turner Jarboe, jr., radio officer.

Weather conditions were reported good, with a coastal storm moving rapidly inland.

Spending Buoys Morale of U. S., Declares Ickes

Secretary Lauds New Deal Policy in Address at Philadelphia.

rather than to pay for food or medicine out of my capital?"

Ickes said the same answer applied to business. He said the officers and directors will reason that reserves were accumuateld to tide over just such a situation. He added that if an individual or a corporation had no reserves there would be no hesitancy in using credit to tide over a period of hard times.

"Credit For Emergencies."

"Yet," he continued, "it is demanded in many quarters that the Government in a time of national calamity refrain from doing what an individual or a business concern does as a matter of course when misfortune comes."

No one, he said, would suggest that a nation attempt to operate with a permanently unbalanced budget. But, he added, credit is established for emergencies such as that which now exists.

"In this connection," he continued, "may I say that I may not agree with Mr. Douglas that even such a crisis as this will not justify an unbalanced budget, but I am in hearty accord with his remark that 'man has a peculiar ability to lose his sense of proportion.'"

"Mr. Douglas and those who think along the same lines with him are in complete agreement that in order to pull ourselves out of this depression we must give people who are willing to work an opportunity to do so. To do this requires the investment of capital, particularly in the heavier industries. Their reasoning seems to be along this line: Business must be stimulated; only the investment of money can stimulate business; banks and private individuals possessing funds refuse to invest; the Government alone has both the money and the will to stimulate business; therefore the Government must not spend any money for this purpose, but, on the contrary, must keep strictly within its budget.

Blames Earlier Presidents.

"The New Deal is not afraid to follow through to the inevitable conclusion that if private capital will not perform its functions, public capital must and will. We will not adopt a defeatist attitude. We decline to run away from logical facts. If the circulation of money alone will restore health to the economic system and only the Federal Government is both able and willing to provide that money, then the Federal Government must and will provide it."

Ickes declared that much of the national debt exists because previous administrations pursued tax-reducing rather than debt-reducng policies. He pointed out that about half of the debt has been carried over from the war. He added that budget balancers ignore the fact that expenditures for capital improvement result in increasing the whole level of incomes.

"It need not be explained again," Ickes continued, "that the Government embarked on the public works program because of the cowardice of private capital and its refusal to come out from under the bed."

Ickes said the PWA had not taken more men off relief rolls and put them on pay rolls because it did not have more money.

"Some people," he said, "either expected too much or they can not forget even a poor opportunity to criticize. Lacking divine power, the administrator could not perform a loaves-and-fishes miracle."

Relief Spending Kept a Mystery about 30 per cent of money for such projects as postoffices could be spent in labor, while in soil-erosion improvement the ratio was 70 per cent for labor and the remainder for administration and materials and supplies.

Necessity for finishing the program—including all allocations and spending—by July 1, 1936, was emphasized by Mr. Roosevelt.

Later it developed that the White House may revive several suggested works projects which failed of approval under the PWA. In that category may be found the proposed trans-Florida canal to connect Jacksonville with the Gulf of Mexico.

Allotment of from $125,000,000 to $145,000,000 for the waterway was urged on the President yesterday by Senator Fletcher and other members of the Florida delegation.

Bridegroom's Suicide Reveals Another Wife, Three Children

A story of tangled lives came to light yesterday as police delved into the strange suicide Sunday afternoon of Ellon C. Howe, who fatally dosed himself with poison in the attic of a cottage newly bought in Lyon Village, Va., for his three-weeks' bride.

From South Dakota came revelation of the fact that his first wife, from whom he had never obtained a divorce, was shocked at news of his death. Three children, the oldest 19, shared their mother's grief.

In Washington something of Howe's unhappy life became known. From competent sources it was learned he had come to this city by way of Scranton, Pa., four years ago. First he worked in the Labor Department, and where he lived he talked constantly of his wife and children. He kept saying he would bring them here, except that "things were uncertain."

He lived with a friend. This friend, a relative of his wife, treated him, he said yesterday, as a father would his son. This in-law, R. K. Meade, who has offices in the Tower Building, talked frankly.

"I had never seen my niece, his real wife. But we Westerners have a way of hanging together and when he came to town he called me up. I took him to my home. But he was a wild fellow and some of his actions caused us to lose some very close friends. So, like a father, I remonstrated with him. Finally I had to ask him to leave. While he lived with us he praised his family and talked often of his 'fine kids' and his wife, whom he termed a 'handsome woman.'"

Meade saw little of Howe after their quarrel and every time he spoke to him about his family he was more and more evasive.

Yesterday Miss Edythe A. Buckler, pretty high school teacher, told The Post how Howe met his bride, formerly Mrs. Margaret Gibson, of Washington.

"Margaret was my best friend," she said. "I first met Mr. Howe a year ago. He told me he was divorced. He talked about his children, told me how pretty they were. After I had known him about three months I introduced him to Margaret."

Mrs. Gibson, a pretty, pale, sensitive brunette, remained in hiding yesterday, refusing to meet reporters, in a state of near collapse. She, too, had thought Meade was divorced. She, too, knew of the children.

"But it seemed a case of love at first sight with both of them," Miss Buckler said. "I was so happy for them both. They hit it off perfectly together. They got married very suddenly. I remember I received a regular marriage announcement from them, with the added note that they were leaving for a honeymoon in New England."

From Danville, Vt., tiny hillside hamlet near the maple-sugar center of St. Johnsbury, C. J. Ives, undertaker of Arlington, received word from Mrs Lillian K. Watt to have the body sent there for burial. Because of the circumstances Mrs. Mae Jacons, Arlington welfare head, ordered it held pending completion of police investigation. Mrs. Watt is believed to be an aunt of Howe. She was not at home in Danville yesterday and it was learned she was on her way to Washington.

Howe's first wife is Mrs. Fannie Meade Howe, who lives in Rapid City, S Dak. Their oldest child is Clayton, 19, and he has two sisters, one 15 and one 12 years old.

Deputy Sheriff Harry L. Woodside, who is investigating the twisted case, said yesterday that Howe had taken enough poison to "kill a regiment." He is believed to have gotten it from a Washington drug store.

Change, Stamps, Marks Given Governor's Fund

Columbus, Ohio, April 15 (AP).—Friend and foe alike sent Gov. Martin L. Davey money today for his "rug and stamp" fund.

The Governor, tabulating the first day's result of his unusual appeal for "nickels and dimes" to pay the cost of his office, discovered he had $126.93 in cash and checks, 10,000 German marks (post-war series) and sixteen 3-cent stamps.

The largest contribution was a $68 donation from "Monroe County friends." The Governor included $31 previously contributed by Senators William Zoul and Bernard McCluskey and Robert Scott in his total.

Three Prisoners Die As Fire Razes Jail

Acmar, Ala., April 15 (AP).—Three Negro prisoners were burned to death here yesterday in a fire that destroyed the jail in which they had been lodged a short time earlier on charges in connection with a shooting.

The dead are T. T. Edwards, Jim Church and John Lacey.

Coroner G. D. Gray, of St. Clair County, who held an inquest, said apparently Church had carried out a threat to burn the jail if he was ever lodged in it.

Drought Worse Than Year Ago, U. S. Plans Aid

Wallace Assistant Studies Erosion Project as Dust Continues.

By the Associated Press.

Vagrant winds blew traffic-stalling dust in southern Colorado yesterday, tossed a mild threat of cold at fruit buds in Missouri and Kansas, fanned flames of an orphanage fire near St. Louis, and hindered shipping on Lake Erie.

The dust-storm situation drew Federal attention with the sending of M. L. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, on an inspection tour of southwestern Kansas. Accompanied by Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, he headed into the area to gather facts for presentation to Secretary Wallace. His report "will be used in development of a long-time soil erosion project," he said.

At Washington, Wallace's department said the drought situation in the Western plains on April 1 was "even worse" than at the same time last year.

Train and highway traffic was at a standstill in southeastern Colorado yesterday.

Children Kept Home.

A dust storm also hampered traffic near Grantsville, Utah, and caused many parents to keep their children out of school.

Smudge pots were burned last night in the Missouri Ozarks to safeguard budding fruit trees against a predicted frost.

One hundred and sixteen children marched in orderly fashion from the burning Lutheran Orphans Home in St. Louis County. The flames, which broke out as the children were finishing morning prayers, spread rapidly before a 22-mile-an-hour wind and caused damage estimated at $150,000.

On Lake Erie a 45-mile-an-hour gale confined heavy freighters to harbor.

Dust clouds still hung over the repeatedly-hit Oklahoma Panhandle, and other dust rolled over Alpine, Tex., in the Big Bend region of the Lone Star State.

Dust winds abated in Minnesota, Iowa, where light rains fell in the east, reported only a small amount of silt—blown in from other States.

Wisconsin and the Chicago area had snow flurries.

The AAA's mounting concern over the Western Great Plains drought was intensified by the official report that on April 1 it was "even worse" than a year ago.

Feed shortages and climbing food prices in the wake of last year's dry siege brought down criticism on the AAA reduction program which has kept the New Deal agency on the defensive much of the time.

The weather report by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics said that in the western tier of States from North Dakota to Texas and the eastern part of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico, precipitation since September 1 has been less than 75 per cent of normal, intensifying an already deficient subsoil moisture condition.

Peace With McCarl Seen.

The bureau denied, however, that extensive crop damage had resulted from dust storms, declaring "While these storms have been serious for the areas affected, the loss of crops from this cause from a national standpoint is relatively unimportant."

The report said spring sowing had been delayed for lack of moisture from western Nebraska and eastern Wyoming southward with moisture sufficient in the Dakotas and Montana to germinate seed.

Meanwhile, Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator, said he expected little difficulty in straightening out objections tentatively raised by Comptroller General McCarl over making benefit payments to spring wheat farmers in return for their promise to curtail acreage in 1936. Similar difficulties in the past have been ironed out in conferences in which changes have been made in AAA programs to meet McCarl's objections, Davis said.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., April 15.—Skies were bright in the blue stem pasture region of south central Kansas today as farmers prepared to welcome an invasion of hungry cattle from the plains of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona and the slopes of the Colorado Rockies.

The season promises to be one of the most prosperous for the pastureland since 1929. More acres of pasture have been leased to cattle owners than in any year since that of the financial crash, said F. K. Reed, Federal agricultural statistician.

Eccles Reveals Loss of $90,000 To Take U.S. Job

Fireworks Absent as Glass Quizzes Chief of Bank Reserve System.

his former association with the First Security Corporation, controlling some 28 banks and branches in Utah, Senator Glass read from the Federal Reserve act. He brought out that no Federal Reserve Board member may hold any bank stock or serve as an officer of a bank.

Governor Eccles testified in detail on how he disposed of his bank holdings, and questioning turned on RFC aid given some of the institutions in the First Security group. It developed that the First Security Bank, head of the group, with a common stock capital of $400,000, sold $600,000 in preferred stock to the RFC, while a smaller bank in the group, the First Security Bank of Rock Springs, with a common stock capital of $10,000, sold $150,000 in preferred stock to the RFC.

For two hours the examination went on, then Chairman Glass dismissed his witness with a courteous "I am obliged to you," and a promise to "expedite the matter as much as possible."

Confident of Confirmation.

How the sub-committee will vote was still in doubt last night, but Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida, chairman of the full Banking Committee, expressed confidence Eccles will be confirmed.

"He made a clean case and I think he's qualified," Senator Fletcher said.

Fletcher enlarged the Glass subcommittee early this session, adding two strongly pro-Administration Senators, reputedly without consulting the Virginian. Once the Eccles nomination is out of the way, the sub-committee, probably later this week, will hold belated hearings on the omnibus Eccles banking bill. Glass would like to split the bill, enacting into law this session only revision of the Federal deposit insurance act and technical changes in the Federal Reserve act.

Following a call at the White House yesterday, Senator Fletcher indicated the President still wants the bill enacted much in its present form, opposing the split. Chairman Henry B. Steagall, of the House Banking Committee, has taken a similar stand.

Winship Will Fly Here for Parleys

Makes Plans as Puerto Rico Law-Makers "Strike."

By the Associated Press.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, April 15.—With the Puerto Rican Legislature "on strike" against the "dictatorial colonial policy" of Washington, Gov. Blanton D. Winship made plans tonight to fly to the Capital for conferences with Government officials.

In the face of sine die adjournment of the Legislature 36 hours in advance of schedule, leaving important legislation hanging, the Governor decreed "business as usual" in Government affairs.

"There will be no interruption of the ordinary course of Government business," he said. He announced that recess appointments of all officials automatically ousted by the legislative "strike" would be forthcoming immediately.

Woman Denies Placing Tacks in Path of Cars

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 15.—Mrs. Sylvia Ulirich, 45, was brought into court today on the charge that she is the person who has been strewing tacks on St. Nicholas avenue for the last year and a half, causing an epidemic of blowouts.

Mrs. Ulirich, released under $500 bail for further hearings, denied guilt, but offered no explanation for a handful of tacks in her coat pocket.

RFC Acts to Ease Rail's Loan Rate

Asks N.Y. Banks Cut Load on Central.

Continuing its policy of forcing down interest charges, the RFC is bringing pressure to bear on New York banks to ease the interest load on the New York Central Railroad, it was indicated yesterday.

Chairman Jesse H. Jones said he had "suggested" to officials of the road that the present 4½ per cent rate charged the railroad for bank loans totaling $63,000,000 should be brought down to the 4 per cent charged by the RFC. The New York Central owes the RFC about $27,500,000.

Commenting on the downward trend of money costs, the RFC chairman gave the opinion "money will get so low that people will finally get busy and borrow some and put it to work." He said the Federal Reserve banks have authorized about $75,000,000 in industrial loans, while his agency has approved some $55,000,000 more.

Mills Men Plan Fight in Courts On Cotton Tax

Boston Meeting Decides on Suit and Assails Secretary Wallace.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, April 15.—Northern cotton goods manufacturers from New England and New York tonight were planning "legal action" against the cotton processing tax, which they claim is the main factor in the plight of the cotton textile industry.

The campaign, authorized at today's meeting of the policy committee of the National Cotton Manufacturers Association, was believed to be the first organized defiance by a major industry of the Administration.

A committee of three members, to be appointed later, was authorized by resolution to seek removal of the tax because "the President has definitely refused to take any steps toward relieving us of the processing tax."

Resolution Assails Wallace.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace was bitterly attacked in another resolution for "inciting the farmers of the South and West to combine against an industry."

Wallace's action was termed by the resolution as "un-American, unworthy of the high office he holds and tending to create discord."

A committee of five was authorized under another resolution to seek to equalize the wage differential between North and South, now estimated at $2.56 per week per worker, "inasmuch as the cotton textile code authority and the President" had failed to act.

Gov. James M. Curley forwarded to President Roosevelt a copy of a letter he sent to Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, in which he asserted "a material measure of relief is possible without delay."

Preferred Jail to Tax.

James Sinclair, 66-year-old president of the Fall River Cotton Manufacturers Association and treasurer of the Charlton Mills there, expressed his individual defiance of the processing tax. He said:

"I am willing to go to jail for refusal to pay this tax."

Sinclair proposed that "unless President Roosevelt shows an inclination to aid the textile industry" Northern and Southern mill owners should refuse to pay the tax.

Gov. H. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire, who attended the Governors' conference with President Roosevelt last week, expressed his "bitter disappointment" over its outcome.

Woolworth Heir, His 'Troth,' Topics

Actress Says He's Engaged; Society Girl Denies All.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 15.—A curious romantic mixup brought conflicting statements today from a movie actress and a socially prominent New York girl whose names have been linked with that of Woolworth Donahue, dapper cousin of Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani and heir to a share of the vast Woolworth fortune.

Miss Wendie Barrie, English actress now in Hollywood, said Donahue telephoned her from Palm Beach, Fla., to ask permission to announce his engagement to Dorothy Fell, Manhattan society girl.

But Miss Fell, in New York, vigorously denied she would marry Donahue.

"I guess he called up Miss Barrie to tell her he was engaged to me so that she would stop telling people she was engaged to him," said Miss Fell.

"I assure you I have no intention whatever of marrying him."

Miss Barie said Donahue informed her that he was in love with Miss Fell. Previously, there have been reports the young Woolworth heir and the English actress were engaged.

"Mr. Donahue asked me if I wanted to talk to Miss Fell," Miss Barrie said. "But there was nothing I could say beyond giving him my sincere hopes for happiness. I didn't speak to the girl."

D. A. R. Told of Campus 'Reds;' Round of Social Events Is Begun

A roomful of D. A. R. members listened intently yesterday afternoon while three young university students described Communist and Socialist activities on their campuses.

The meeting, held in Memorial Continental Hall under auspices of the committee on national defense through patriotic education, of which Mrs. William A. Becker, candidate for president general, is chairman, also was addressed by two House members and a former Russian princess.

Response of the delegates to the addresses was enthusiastic. Mrs. John Trigg Moss, of Missouri, rose at the conclusion of the gathering and said:

"I would rather miss all the rest of the congress than this session. I don't care what they call us, crack skulls, nuts, militarists, or anything else, as long as we can bring into the world men of backbone and stamina such as you."

She was referring to the three students, Joseph T. Elvove, of the University of Maryland; J. Kenneth Bennett, of Columbia University, and Rudyard Uzzel, of the University of Pennsylvania.

The three pleaded for adult support of patriotic groups in the colleges and universities, declaring the National Students League and the League for Industrial Democracy were receiving such support from adult radical groups.

The House members who spoke were Representative John J. McSwain, of South Carolina, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, and Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

McSwain told the delegates the next war will be fought in the air. He urged training boys "who are now playing with toys in the living room" to be aviators.

Sumners said the best way for America to get out of its troubles was to have each citizen assume individual responsibility.

The Russian princess was Mme. Tatiana Tchernavin, author of "Escape From the Soviets." She talked about conditions in Russia and the alleged Red menace to the world.

A rumor that Mrs. Edmund Burke Ball, of Muncie, Ind., had dropped out of the race for national historian was denied by Mrs. Ball at a tea given in her honor at the Mayflower Hotel by Paul Revere Chapter, of Muncie.

Mrs. Ball said she had no intention of withdrawing. She is a candidate on the slate of Mrs. Flora Myers Gillentine, of Tennessee, running for president general.

More than 300 delegates, national officers and persons prominent in Washington, both officially and socially, attended the tea for Mrs. Ball. Among those on the receiving line, in addition to Mrs. Ball, were Mrs. William David Price, first vice president of Paul Revere Chapter; Mrs. Bonnie Farwell, State regent of Indiana; Mrs. Lafayette Porter, director of the central district, Indiana; Mrs. Roscoe O'Byrne, vice president general, Indiana; Mrs. Harriet Rigdon, past national treasurer, and Mrs. Frank Shaw. Arrangements were made by Mrs. M. H. Doran.

Police protection at the congress is being provided by members of the headquarters Crime Prevention Bureau. It is this group of men which usually handle "red" activities, such as demonstrations before the embassies or hunger marches. However, the men assigned said their detail at D. A. R. headquarters was merely to watch out for pickpockets and thieves.

Mrs. William H. Pouch, candidate for organizing secretary general on Mrs. Becker's ticket, was hostess at breakfast this morning at the Mayflower in honor of the "Happy Runners of 1931." Mrs. James C. Crenshaw is president of this group.

Roosevelt Vetoes Bill to Create A Holiday Honoring Pulaski

Holds Plan Would Detract From Honor U. S. Owes to Washington.

President Roosevelt yesterday set his face against the proposition of patriotic societies to put aside one day each year in commemoration of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, of Revolutionary War fame. He vetoed two bills, one of which would have made October 11 "Pulaski Day."

While praising the Polish nobleman, the President told the Senate in a message disapproving the measure that, "for our own leader of the American Revolution, the greatest of Americans, and for him alone, have we as a people set apart one day each year."

"Every American should have the deepest appreciation of the brilliant and gallant services of Gen. Pulaski in the Revolutionary War," Mr. Roosevelt stated. "His devotion to duty ended only when he fell in action in the service of the Republic; he is one of our heroes of that time and of all time.

"Gen. Pulaski was distinguished among the noble company of those who gave their all for that cause; some were Americans; some were from countries across the sea. I do not think that Gen. Pulaski would have wished to be singled out from his fellows and comrades for more honor than we can give to them all.

"Our tributes to the memory of the officers who served on the staff of Gen. Washington will be the more fitting and appropriate if we do not seek to legislate separate memorial days for each of them, however illustrious they may be."

The second bill vetoed would have given Charles C. Floyd, listed in Army records from Barnesville, Ohio, the status of an honorable discharge from the service. To do so, the President said, would be to single him out for "preferential treatment."

Whole Town Helps Parents of Triplets

By the United Press.

Central City, Pa., April 15. Three baby brothers passed their third day tonight with a good chance of survival, thanks to a country doctor and Central City's miners.

The boys—John, Jim and Joe—came to their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Kiser, in an abandoned, shabby schoolhouse Saturday. Dr. Thayer Lyon, a kindly physician who has brought many babies into the world, attended their 22-year-old mother, and told the story of their extreme privation which prompted the townfolk to stock their makeshift home with food and clothing.

The father, 23, and jobless, led his little family of three to the old schoolhouse two years ago. Tonight a trained nurse had been brought in to care for Mrs. Kiser and the children.

the society and its officers are committed. Our air force should be second to none.

"We want no Communism and we desire legislative enactment against any and all who by word or deed advocate the overthrow of our Government. It is time such advocates were overthrown themselves. Our Nation must be kept wolf and termite proof lest parasites sap its vitality and undermine us."

Much progress has been made by the Federal Government in its war on organized crime since he addressed the 1934 meeting of the D. A. R., the delegates were told by Attorney General Cummings. Credit for this is due, he said, to the legislation enacted by the Seventy-third Congress giving the Department of Justice authority in cases involving robbery of National and Federal reserve banks, fugitive felons and carriers of firearms.

Much To Be Done.

All of these laws have bolstered cooperation between State and Federal authorities, the Attorney General stated, but much yet remains to be done in this direction.

"There can be no higher form of patriotism, no greater contribution to the public good," he said, "than for your membership, with its vast ramifications, reaching into tens of thousands of communities, * * * to demand that the administration of criminal justice shall be modernized and placed upon a basis of maximum effectiveness throughout the United States, that the operations of courts, of prosecutors, of police departments, of prison officials and of parole boards shall be lifted above the swirling currents of politics, and that the detection, apprehension, trial and punishment of criminals shall be confided to trained professional groups free to reach unhampered decisions and not forced to balance conclusions against the devitalizing and distorting considerations of political or personal interest."

Woodside Church To Honor Worker

The vestry room of Grace Episcopal Church, Woodside, Md., will be furnished as a memorial to Mrs. Archibald Small, leader in church work who died several months ago, it was announced at a meeting of the woman's guild of the church.

A committee of one member from each organization of the church and the rector, the Rev. Frederick J. Morris, has been appointed to raise $200 for furnishings. Mrs. Small served as president of the guild for a number of years.

Activities planned by the group include an old-fashioned egg hunt Easter Monday under the direction of Mrs. Ronald McDonald, and a dance May 3 at the parish hall, to be arranged by Mrs. George Good.

Charleston G.O.P. Claims Election

Dawson Mayor by 2,000 Majority, Is Report.

By the Associated Press.

Charleston, W. Va., April 15.—The election of City Judge Daniel Boone Dawson, Republican, as Mayor of Charleston, by a majority of approximately 2,000, was claimed tonight by Walter S. Hallanan, Republican national committeeman.

"I base that figure on returns from approximately two-thirds of the precincts," Hallanan said.

The unofficial tabulation in 13 of the city's 61 precincts gave Dawson 2,462 and J. Horner Davis, Democrat, 2,078.

The candidates for treasurer, city judge and members of the council were running close to the votes polled by the mayoral nominees.

1,000 Convicts Quit Jail Jobs, Ask New Policy

'Strike' in Ohio in Protest Against Parole Board; No Violence.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, April 15.—A fourth of Ohio Penitentiary's 4,240 convicts walked away from their machines in four prison workshops today in "passive" revolt against policies of the State Parole Board. There was no violence.

Warden James C. Woodard, three months in office, tapped the institution's "grapevine" communication system tonight in a search for ringleaders of a "strike" for more paroles.

Refusing to permit outsiders to interview the convicts, Woodard said he was "satisfied there will be no serious trouble."

A thousand working inmates laid down their tools and refused to work in the print shop, cotton mills, woolen mill and automobile license plate shops.

Unable to induce the convicts to return to their tasks, Woodard ordered them marched to their cells. "They went quietly and peacefully, with no disturbance of any kind," he said.

Half the strikers were assembled in the prison chapel in the afternoon. There, Woodard, who served as deputy warden until last January 26 and was known as a favorite of the inmates, addressed the strikers.

"I told them the best thing they could do would be to go back to work when the time comes in the morning," he said. "Most of them seemed willing to go back.

"I'll talk to the rest of them in the morning, and if they don't go back we will determine then what action to take."

Woodard said the leaders of the revolt had not been determined. All of the strikers were given their lunches and dinners in their cells and will be given their breakfasts in the morning, he said.

Members of the Board of Paroles were out of the city hearing applications from prisoners at Mansfield Reformatory. It was against the board, Woodard said, that the protests were aimed.

"The prisoners felt the board should take a more liberal attitude toward paroles," he explained.

Philadelphia's Bar Purge Hits State Senator

City Civil Service Head and 5 Other Lawyers Are Disbarred.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 15.—In an unprecedented purge prosecuted by the local bar association, a State senator, a civil service commissioner and four other Philadelphia lawyers today were disbarred from practice of law by the Common Pleas Courts.

Collusion with racketeers and other unethical practices were charged. Two other bar members were exonerated, but were admonished.

The senator disbarred is Samuel W. Salus, 63, a State legislator for 32 years and a lawyer for 40 years, whose conduct the court branded "reprehensible."

Attitude "Extraordinary."

Herbert W. Salus, Philadelphia civil service commissioner, is the senator's younger brother. The "extraordinary feature" is that he "evidently regards his conduct as meritorious," the court said in disbarring him.

Others disbarred and the court's comment:

Albert P. Goldberg, employed by the Salus law office—"Guilty of the grossest kind of professional misconduct."

Arthur S. Werblun—"Sought to conceal his misdeeds by false and evasive testimony and by the destruction of account books of his firm."

Charles J. Green, former partner of Werblun—"Equally culpable."

Bernard L. Lemisch—Abetted "a criminal conspiracy."

Discharged:

Fred Camgartner, former assemblyman—"Displayed an abundant ignorance of things going on about him in his own office."

I. J. Brad Brodsky, former associate of Lemisch—"Deserves censure."

Disbarred Will Appeal.

The disbarred attorneys have 30 days in which to file appeals with the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. The lawyers or their counsel indicated in all cases that the appeals will be taken and possibly supersedeases will be sought to stay the disbarment pending final decree.

The Salus law office's part in the alleged unethical practices has not been disposed of entirely. Arthur S. Salus, the senator's son, has been referred to the bar association "for appropriate action" as the result of a morals case in which his father was involved as counsel.

Edward L. Blasband, described as a bail runner in the Salus office, has been cited for perjury in connection with his testimony at the inquiry.

Powers Invite Reich, Soviet To Navy Parley

London Hears Bids Were Sent Before Stresa, Italy and France Assenting.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 15.—With negotiations under way for bilateral naval conversations between Britain, Russia and Germany and with the Little Entente resigned to increased armies for Austria, Hungaria and Bulgaria, events seemed shaping tonight toward active peace moves in the wake of the Stresa conference and the league council session at Geneva.

As Prime Minister Ramsay Macdonald arrived from the Stresa conference, preparing to outline his accomplishments at Stresa to the cabinet, naval quarters heard that invitations had been sent to Berlin and Moscow to participate in technical naval discussions here in the near future.

It was said invitations were issued before the meeting at Stresa and was discussed with the French and Italians during the conference, meeting with their approval.

Laval Going to Russia.

Reports from Paris said Foreign Minister Pierre Laval was planning to leave Saturday to sign the widely heralded bilateral defense pact with the Soviet foreign minister.

In Berlin the opening of the league council session to consider France's memorandum concerning a rearmed Germany in violation of the Versailles Treaty left official quarters guessing whether Geneva would close the gate left open at Stresa for future peace negotiations.

In other words, Germany expected abandonment of the Versailles Treaty.

The "sanctity of treaties" idea was being heavily played in the German press, for which Wilhelmstrasse officials offered a simple solution, "not to force treaties on any one; and to conclude only such treaties as would be signed voluntarily by anybody after free liberal negotiations."

Concrete Action Doubted.

"Stresa did not spoil everything," said the newspaper Deutsche Allegemeine Zeitung, which sought to justify Germany's re-armament by citing a breach of the Treaty of Versailles by other nations.

It was taken for granted in official German quarters that the League Council, as was the case in Stresa, will merely "regret" German conscription.

French officials expressed new hope that the scrapped eastern security pact which France had fostered may be revived in view of Germany's willingness to accept the nonaggression principle without military obligations.

Two possibilities were seen in Paris, one a general mutual assistance pact and the other a general nonaggression pact, completed by a series of bilateral mutual assistance agreements such as the Franco-Russian accord which Laval is to sign in Moscow.

Belgrade dispatches said the French and Italian ministers had formally called the attention of the Jugoslav government to the six resolutions at Stresa in connection with the desire of Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria for military equality, and had suggested that Yugoslavia examine this question with a view to reaching an understanding within the framework of a general regional security pact. The Yugoslav government took the suggestions under advisement.

Italian Press Optimistic.

At Geneva, Dr. Eduard Benes, the Czechoslovakian foreign minister, told Laval of France that the Little Entente, which includes Yugoslavia and Rumania, would be disposed to advocate a substantial increase in the armies of Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria.

The Italian press reflected optimism over the results of the Stresa conversations under headlines informing the public that the discussions have "affirmed that vigorous and active solidarity of the three powers assured the tranquillity of Europe."

All papers lauded Mussolini for his vigorous direction of the conference as its president. They all published the Stresa communique and departing declarations of Mussolini, MacDonald and Pierre Etienne Flandin of France under front-page headlines and with editorial assurance to the people that a troubled Europe might now hope to proceed with confidence toward the pacific adjustment of its affairs.

Luray, Va., April 15 (AP).—While Ernest Meadows awaited in jail here for trial on charges of fatally wounding his wife near their Jolletts Hollow home, a son was treated at Shenandoah for a gunshot wound which officers said they believed was inflicted accidentally.

Neither Police Chief C. H. Williams, of Shenandoah, nor Sheriff Lucas, of Luray knew whether the wounded was Marvin Meadows, 14, or Willie Meadows, 12. Willie Meadows, the officers said, was the only eyewitness to the shooting of his mother about a month ago.

George Lansbury took up the Laborite belaboring of the government's budget.

"The chancellor balanced accounts only by refusing to pay Britain's debts to the United States," Lansbury said. "If a Labor government had defaulted similarly, we would have been told it was the end of all things."

Lansbury denied the government's description of the estimtaes as a "working man's budget," and declared it failed to improve the situation of the army of unemployed.

The defense estimates and civil estimates already approved by Parliament for the New Year totaled 490,400,000 pounds ($2,279,666,000), or an increase of 20,900,000 pounds ($101,417,250) over last year. Increases in air force expenditures and other defenses are a major part of this mounting expense.

The income tax reductions, however, are expected to offset unpopularity of rising arms expenditures.

Chamberlain said the personal exemption would be raised from 130 pounds to 170 pounds ($727.50 to $824.50) for married persons, and the allowance for children after the first child raised from 40 to 50 pounds ($194 to $242.)

In the lower brackets, the government cut the income tax on the first 135 pounds ($654.75) from the present rate of 2 shillings 3 pence in the pound (54 cents on each $4.85) to 1 shilling 6 pence (36 cents).

The chancellor forecast the coming year's income tax return at 237,000,000 pounds ($1,149,450,000), which is an increase of 14,000,000 pounds ($67,900,000). The nation's bonded debt service, Chamberlain said, would remain at 224,000,000 pounds ($1,086,400,000).

He proposed also to reduce the entertainment tax where performances are given by actors, and to end taxes on seats up to 6 pence (12 cents).

Chamberlain said inland revenue during the year furnished 16,000,000 pounds ($77,600,000) more than had been expected. Of the amount, income taxes furnished 9,377,000 pounds ($45,478,450).

The nominal amount of the national debt decreased 21,750,000 pounds ($105,487,500), to a total of 7,800,565,000 pounds ($37,832,740,250).

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woman Given Blame In Terrorist Scare

By the Associated Press.

Marseille, April 15.—A woman's act in changing the age on her passport resulted today in a "terrorist" scare which gave half of Europe the chills.

Police said Eda Caroni, who was expelled from France with Rudolph Gundscner, had been widely sought because the age on her passport did not check with figures given to Swiss authorities, and it was later found she had altered her statement of her age.

These were believed to be the "terrorists" reported at Geneva as having plotted against the lives of leading statesmen at the Stresa conference and at the league council session.

Police said the only charge against them was that of having false passports and they are being returned to the Swiss frontier. Police said they sailed from Tunis, April 6, and a cablegram from police there resulted in their detention at Marseille April 10.

Nazis Are Victims In Corridor Riots

tagonism over Nazi attempts to award German military crosses to former German army men living in Poland.

Behind it, it was pointed out, lies 1,000 years of enmity between the Poles and Germans along the Baltic coast, where Poland now holds the provinces of Pomorze and Poznan, given to her under the Versailles Treaty to afford access to the sea. The territory cuts off East Prussia from the rest of Germany and has been a sore point in continental relations ever since the war.

The most severe disorders were in Wejherowo and Kacit, both near Gdynia. Reports reaching Berlin said a mob threw cobblestones through the windows of scores of German homes and business houses in Wejherowo, a city of 13,000 in Pomorze. The riots were said to have started Saturday. Sunday night a yelling throng invaded the streets and threatened the German population, who barricaded themselves from attack.

Reports said a city official led the demonstration after addressing an anti-German demonstration where shouts of "Down with the Germans!" and "Throw the dogs out!" were heard.

Norfolk, Va., April 15 (AP).—Preston B. Rogers, former Richmond attorney, indicted in Richmond on charges of forgery in connection with a divorce case, will be turned over to the Richmond police tomorrow, Sergt. J. C. Benton said here this afternoon.

Rogers is charged with presenting Lonnie Lemuel Kirk, a client, with what purported to be a copy of a final decree divorcing him from his wife, May Ella Williams Kirk. Kirk who remarried, told the grand jury that the copy bore the seal of Alex Campbell, deputy court clerk, but the latter said he had no record of any such proceedings.

The Cow Can't Deliver

THE cow has always been a homebody.

She gives her milk, but she takes no responsibility for getting it where it is wanted.

Back in the days of national infancy, folks that had cows supplied non-owners within easy walking distance. The horse broadened the range of delivery.

Butter was a home business. A housewife had to have a way with a churn, else the family was likely to go butterless. Age didn't excuse grandma from helping.

Someone thought up a contraption to use the motion of her rocking chair.

The itch to end drudgery came with the first settlers. One of the first things the government did after the war for independence was the establishment of a patent department. Designs for dairy machines were conspicuously frequent.

Settlements grew, villages grew, towns grew, the nation grew.

No longer is America a push-cart, or one-horse country.

Great cities have sucked in population with alien roots. Rural people felt the urban urge and broke home ties.

The skyscraper became a symbol. Civilization went vertical.

Giant industries defined new ways of living for thousands of workers.

Cows stayed on the land.

Milk was in the country. Consumers were in cities.

The milkman's job was cut out for him.

The milk company developed. It grew as the need for it grew. Cheese factories, creameries, ice cream plants supplanted home talent.

Milk became a great and important industry because the American people saw they could go about their own business and rely on a company to keep in touch with the cows.

but insisted the declaration with Italy agreeing to the same thing was not aimed at Germany, because it also protects Germany from French aggression.

The initial day's session got off to a slow start as far as German re-armament is concerned, the council's original opening being postponed until mid-afternoon to let the various delegates sound each other out.

"Big Three" Action.

As a result, the French demand for consideration of action against Germany's denunciation of the military clauses of the Versailles treaty by Adolf Hitler's conscript army program was postponed until tomorrow.

It was definitely confirmed that the "Big Three" resolution to be set before the council in the morning will—

1. Expressly condemn Germany.

2. Establish a committee to devise measures, such as economic sanctions, to punish future treaty violators.

The council instead turned its attention to the Italian-Abyssinian border dispute in East Africa, and in a private session arranged that this should be settled only through arbitration, as requested by Abyssinia in the face of Italy's rushing thousands of crack troops to Africa. Details will be settled at the regular May council session.

Now, more than a decade later, the eldest of three children resulting from that romantic union, Ananda is preparing to take over the throne which belonged to his ancestors on one side and rule the common people of his ancestors on the other side.

A Weak Evasion.

The controversy between Secretary Wallace and the cotton textile industry involves so many different angles and viewpoints that a certain degree of confusion over the issue is to be expected. There seems to be no excuse, however, for official contributions to that confusion. In a situation of this kind officials can not guard too carefully against the use of unsound arguments to support their position.

Secretary Wallace has come to the point of admitting that a serious situation has developed in our cotton export trade. In his address at Atlanta he pointed out that the United States was able to export only 2,565,000 bales from August 1 to April 1 as compared with 6,098,000 bales during the same period a year ago. Our customers abroad are buying less cotton from America and more from other producing countries. The unpleasant implications of that fact can no longer be ignored.

In analyzing the reasons for this impending crisis in the cotton growing industry, however, Mr. Wallace is inclined to evade the responsibility which falls squarely upon the AAA. He is quoted as saying that the disadvantages which American cotton now encounters in the world market are due more to the difficulties of other countries in securing dollar exchange than to the maintenance of artificial prices here.

The unstable condition of currencies throughout most of the world and our excess of merchandise exports over imports do create serious handicaps to the extension of foreign trade. Nevertheless, the Department of Commerce reports that merchandise exports in 1934 exceeded those of 1933 by 27 per cent in value and 8 per cent in volume. As a whole our foreign trade is slowly expanding, in spite of extreme handicaps. Why should cotton exports decline in such sharp variance to the general trend? When the world is buying a larger volume of other American commodities, it would undoubtedly find ways and means of paying for our cotton if competing fibers could not be purchased cheaper in other countries.

Evasions of this sort are not in keeping with the candor which the public has come to expect from Secretary Wallace.

Omnibus Bills.

The social security bill and the banking bill of 1935 provide outstanding examples of that objectionable legislative practice known as omnibus bills.

Superficially viewed, an omnibus measure often seems a coherent legislative plan, because it deals with various aspects of some particular problem. Old-age pensions and unemployment insurance, as President Roosevelt says, go hand in hand. But their logical connection is not a legitimate excuse for urging Congress to accept at one gulp a catch-all measure embracing such highly debatable and technical matters as Federal old-age benefits, compulsory old-age insurance, unemployment insurance and a multiplicity of grants to the several States to assist them in caring for dependent and crippled children, to further vocational rehabilitation, and finance other forms of local relief.

Such a heterogeneous assortment of proposals can not be adequately studied and voted upon intelligently unless they are presented in the form of separate bills to be considered on their individual merits.

It is equally specious to argue that Congress should consider the banking bill of 1935 as a unified piece of legislation merely because it deals solely with the subject of banking and effects changes in our banking laws. Title I of the bill provides for modifications of the system of Federal deposit insurance and quick action is required to eliminate unacceptable features of the permanent deposit law before it comes into effect. A third section of the bill relates to various technical and largely minor changes in existing law. There is no legitimate reason for linking these proposals with the second part of the bill, designed to effect a radical alteration in the structure of the Federal Reserve system and to centralize control over credit policies in the hands of a politically-controlled Federal Reserve Board.

The Administration has made it apparent that it objects to attempts to convert the omnibus proposals which it has sponsored into separate bills, fearing that some favorite measure may be "sidetracked." Such an attitude is excellent evidence that omnibus bills are obstacles to intelligent legislative consideration of matters that call for careful study. They confuse conscientious lawmakers, and they give the irresponsible an excuse for yielding to external pressure.

The fact that certain Senators are openly rebelling against efforts of advocates of the omnibus banking bill to take it or leave it as it stands, is a healthy indication that Congress is aware of the danger of this form of legislation. Omnibus measures may not be as inimical to deliberative legislative processes as docile acceptance by Congress of ready-made laws. Nevertheless, under favorable conditions, they can be employed most adroitly to achieve Executive aims with a minimum amount of intelligent legislative opposition or scrutiny.

If Congress wishes to protect itself against the insidious type of Executive dominance made possible by the omnibus bill, it must insist upon the substitution of specific proposals for a legislative potpourri.

The Forgotten Article.

In the Covenant of the League of Nations there is an article, never as yet invoked, which if it had been utilized could have done much to prevent the present European crisis. This article, number 19, reads:

> The Assembly may from time to time advise the reconsideration by members of the League of treaties which have become inapplicable and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world.

The history of Article 19 in the framing of the League Covenant is of great interest. In the original drafts this provision for treaty revision, in mandatory rather than permissive form, was combined with the provision for territorial guarantee which later became the controversial Article 10. The idea was that the League should guarantee the treaty settlements of 1919 only if it had the authority to demand treaty revision in cases where those settlements proved demonstrably unworkable or unfair. The thought was clearly expressed by President Wilson when, in his opening address at the Peace Conference, he said:

> There are many complicated questions connected with the present settlements which, perhaps, can not be successfully worked out to an ultimate issue by the decisions we shall arrive at here. I can easily conceive that many of these settlements will need subsequent reconsideration; that many of the decisions we shall make will need subsequent alterations in some degree * * * Settlements may be temporary, but the actions of the nations in the interests of peace and justice must be permanent. We can set up permanent processes. We may not be able to set up permanent decision * * *

It was one of the great blunders of history that the intended balance between treaty guarantee and treaty revision was eliminated during the drafting of the League's Covenant. While the mild provision for the reconsideration of treaties survived in Article 19, as quoted above, this has never served as an adequate offset to the guarantee clause in Article 10. The separation of what was designed as two indivisible parts of a single whole did more than help to keep the United States out of the League. It also made it much more plausible to assert that the League was created as an instrumentality of the victorious powers, designed to keep the vanquished in permanent subjection.

Yesterday the Council of the League met in emergency session at Geneva, to consider the French demand that Germany be condemned for her unilateral repudiation of Part V of the Treaty of Versailles. Some such condemnation, though probably not in very severe terms, is to be expected from the session. So much was made clear in the platitudes divulged by the responsible leaders of Great Britain, France and Italy at the close of their meeting at Stresa.

But whether the council will have the statesmanship to offset its criticism of Germany by an admission of the League's failure to work for peaceful revision of unworkable treaty settlements remains to be seen. "Germany," says the French memorandum to the council, "has sought to provide a unilateral solution for an international problem." France, the Germans can as truthfully retort, has consistently sought to block multilateral solution for some international problems created by the Treaty of Versailles.

When the French move to invoke Article 19 against their interests as freely as they would invoke Article 10 for their interests, a restoration of American faith in the constructive political possibilities of the League of Nations will be in order.

Source Of The Trouble.

The recently-negotiated trade agreement with Belgium was the first concluded with a European country whose exports compete directly with American products. For that reason it is regarded as an especially important test of the feasibility of trying to expand our foreign trade by a general reduction of tariff barriers. The agreement had hardly been concluded when Belgium deserted the gold standard and announced a 28 per cent devaluation of her currency.

Evidently desiring to avoid outright modification or actual suspension of the trade pact under an "escape" clause inserted in anticipation of possible depreciation of the belga, the State Department has obtained assurances that the Belgian government will supervise the prices quoted by exporters "with a view to preventing serious disturbances detrimental to American interests." Export licenses will be immediately required for a specified list of articles and may be later applied to other commodities.

Thus our agreement with Belgium, intended to lower tariff barriers, has resulted in the erection of new obstructions to trading. However, under the system of unconditional most-favored nation treatment, countries that have not devalued their currencies to our detriment may still enjoy the benefits of the lower rates conceded to Belgium, and, presumably, the supervision of Belgian exports is merely designed to prevent "exchange dumping."

While the Belgian agreement has undeniably come into operation under most inauspicious circumstances, the obstacles encountered in this instance do not constitute a blanket indictment of reciprocal bargaining. They merely show that the State Department is seriously handicapped in concluding definitive trade pacts with other countries so long as the currencies of trading nations continue to fluctuate in terms of gold and in relation to one another.

The Lesson Of Refunding.

In announcing the Treasury's intention to refund the remainder of the outstanding Liberty Loan bonds, Secretary Morgenthau expressed the opinion that the log jam in the capital market has been broken and that "there is no longer any reason why capital should not flow normally into the arteries of business." It is implied that the Government has prepared the way for a general investment revival by its success in refunding $5,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds.

The importance of substituting long for short term maturities and of reducing interest charges upon the public debt is unquestionable, and the Treasury is to be congratulated for its achievements to date. However, it would be a great mistake to conclude from the results of past refunding operations that capital will continue to be available in large quantities, at low rates, to finance continuous governmental deficits in addition to meeting demands from private borrowers.

Secretary Morgenthau is also too complacent in his intimation that the United States can carry on huge refunding operations in a "commonplace" manner, without resort to the precautions taken by the British in forbidding new capital issues during the conversion period. In the first place, it was unnecessary to prohibit new corporate offerings in the American market because they have been virtually non-existent for many months, barring recent refunding issues. The Treasury not only had a free field through elimination of private competition for investment funds, but it had created a sure demand for its own low-yield obligations by building up the excess reserves of our banks, by lavish borrowing and spending.

Furthermore, the British conversion operations were designed to hasten attainment of a balanced budget—a goal that has since been achieved. Keeping these facts in mind, the Treasury certainly would be rash to conclude that a mere saving of $100,000,000 in current interest charges warrants the addition of many more billions to the rapidly mounting Federal debt.

Ease of placement and low yields have long since ceased to be reliable indicators of the state of public credit in any country in which private investment outlets have been restricted, and interest rates artificially lowered by credit or monetary manipulation. Various debtor states of central Europe, for instance, have succeeded in refunding long-term public obligations with greater facility than neighboring countries having a much more solid financial standing. The reason for their achievements is plain. Prospective investors have had no alternative outlets for surplus funds, and so have preferred low interest returns on government issues in preference to hoarding.

Secretary Morgenthau's justified optimism should, therefore, have been tempered with a warning to those who believe that success in refunding Liberty bond issues is a signal that it is safe to postpone budgetary balance for an indefinite period. Even though Mr. Ickes thinks otherwise, we can not continue to add huge sums to the public debt and expect to witness a concurrent, sustained revival of private financing.

Down, But Not Outdone.

Wiley Post and Winnie Mae, his famous monoplane, made a forced landing at Purdue University Airport Sunday, thus finishing unsuccessfully a third attempt by the aviator to break the transcontinental air speed record by way of stratosphere. The ambitious flier seemed dejected at his failure and said disconsolately that he had rather not talk about it at all.

There are several features in connection with this amazing effort that will not be understood by the layman. Accounts attribute failure to the fact that "a clutch on one of his superchargers was stripped." The unmechanical mind has no more conception of the meaning of that phrase than it does of the incredible velocity of a plane which hurtles at 300 miles per hour through what is literally thin air. And there is no reason why a person should clutter up his vocabulary with technical words which are utterly meaningless, and in the main, useless to him. The newer jargon of the air has as little place in the average person's daily life as nautical phraseology.

But there is a side to Post's flight with which it would be well for everyone to become familiar. And that is the indomitable spirit of the man who refuses to stand on past accomplishments and is downcast at failing to reach a goal almost beyond the limit of human conception. In 1933, Wiley Post set four records on his flight around the world. Not content with that, he was determined to break Col. Roscoe Turner's transcontinental record. And now, he is ashamed because he didn't quite make it. Imagine feeling humiliated at attaining a speed of only 5 miles a minute, a bare 6 miles above the earth's surface. After all, Mr. Post . . .

The person who says, "I'd lend it to you if I had it," is probably telling the truth. The pursuance of such a policy will soon break anyone.

Who Can Define Munitions?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There seems to be no question in the minds of anyone that the people of this country are opposed to war with other nations if it can be avoided without dishonor. The only question is the means to be employed.

Please consider this suggestion:

Let the Congress enact a law making it a penal offense to manufacture for or ship (directly or indirectly) to any foreign country, then at war, any munitions of war or raw materials capable of being fabricated into such munitions.

Let responsibility for violation of this law rest on executive officers or managing directors of corporations, members of firms, partnerships, companies or individuals; and let such violations be punished by imprisonment for a term of years and accompanied by a heavy fine.

I am well convinced that our lawmakers are all anxious to avert the calamity of war and that the plan above outlined will meet with the hearty approval of their constituents.

I would thank you for an expression of opinion as to this method of keeping us out of war.

J. J. BUCHANAN.

Civil Service Pay.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Scarcely had Congress authorized a restoration of the last 5 per cent reduction under the economy act of 1932, than H. R. 3980, sponsored by Representative Sirovich, was introduced. This legislation, as admitted by its authors, would cost the taxpayers $12,000,000 a year. But in the estimate of this writer, at the end of four years, when the automatic promotions provided by the bill had matured, it would cost nearer a quarter of a billion.

The unreasonable propaganda of non-Federal officials of organized civil service groups is based upon sinister slogans and shibboleths such as a "Living Wage," "Merit," "Efficiency," "A Model Government," etc. Not an iota of evidence is submitted to show what a living wage is, or whether a living wage for an individual or a family group is intended, and no evidence of merit or efficiency is submitted.

As one who has for nearly 20 years observed conditions in the civil service, and who for several years has appeared before congressional committees in opposition to bills to increase civil service pay, the writer is prepared to demonstrate that if the various types of work were graded on a scientific principle, with a reasonable minimum and maximum rate of pay, reduced by at least one-third without injustice to any one; or employment could be given to a vast number of the 50,000 unemployed college graduates who are now being saved from poverty or suicide by relief and not a few of whom are engaged in revolutionary activity to change our economic policy.

Eggs And Easter.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few words of appreciation are certainly due The Post for its editorial, "Tradition vs. Travesty," in the April 10 issue, commenting upon a report of a church committee at White Plains, N. Y., condemning certain practices termed by the committee "a travesty of the Easter-tide."

While the committee deplores "the distribution of toy rabbits and candy eggs as having no relation to the resurrection," the church should remember that she herself connected this old custom—at least in so far as the Easter eggs are concerned—with the feast of the Resurrection of the Savior, who, like the hidden life in the egg, slept in the grave for three days before He awakened to new life.

Eggs have been the symbol of life from earliest antiquity. Colored eggs were used yearly during the spring season in almost every country centuries before the advent of Jesus the Christ, and in Egypt they were exchanged among the people as sacred symbols of the springtime, which was, is and ever will be the emblem of birth, or re-birth, cosmic and human, celestial and terrestrial.

The psychological urge for putting on new clothing at Easter time is in a very real sense only the human compliance with the natural operation of the life forces throughout all nature, and man himself, being the highest embodiment of her production, ought not to lag behind in any of her processes.

Would it not be more in keeping with our spiritual, intellectual and even physical well-being if we looked at these old traditions and customs from their inner as well as outer meaning?

Wells For Prairies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with interest your editorial of April 12, "Retreat From the Prairies." I have been an actual observer for nearly 60 years of the development and now decadence of the prairies of the West which you mention. Thirty to sixty years ago these plains were covered with grass and vegetation. Generally, the soil was rich and offered inviting locating places for those of little worldly possessions. These people, however, were endowed with a firm determination to make the best of conditions as they found them and were willing by the sweat of their brow to develop homes and earn a living, which at first was very frugal. They did not acquire large tracts of land, but located and tilled only the acreage that the family with the little equipment then available could care for.

Cultivation, diversified crops, shrubbery, animals and people will bring moisture. The thousands of acres which are cultivated by tractors, with a farm house here and there without vegetation except the crops that grow for a few months of the year leaving the soil during the balance of the year to bake or pulverize, do not attract moisture and invite drought and the dust-storms so prevalent in the Mid-western belt during the last year or two. In my opinion there is but one way to overcome "this grim maneuver of nature." That would be through perhaps the Federal Government financing the drilling of artesian or other wells upon small tracts of land and offering inducements for homesteaders to begin all over again as they did 40 or 50 years ago when they went into partnership with nature and tilled the soil as God intended it should be tilled. An Absurd Conclusion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in The Post of April 5 on the student antiwar strike under the caption "Common Sense" was the height of sophistry.

Your basic argument that "demonstrations . . . invite counter-demonstrations" logically resolves itself into the proposition: "If an injustice is being done, do not protest as this might excite those who profit from the injustice;" while your unfounded branding of the strike as "propagandist" and an "irresponsible disorder" can only be construed as provocation to active and unthinking suppression.

On the other hand, the fundamental contention that another world war is today being prepared and can only be prevented or stopped by the active opposition of the masses of people, is smugly ignored—it is "foreign to the objectives of scholarship."

Finally, your condescending conclusion that "the community is, of course, sympathetic with their high ideal" could be indorsed by the most rabid militarist. In time of crisis, one is either for or against war, and it is evident that you are not or will not be against it.

Scottsboro and Mooney.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The decision of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case has done a great deal to add to the prestige of that body for its absolute impartiality.

The decision in the Tom Mooney case, in my opinion, was not so equitable, because the California courts and authorities have shown time and again that Tom Mooney's real crime is being a labor organizer. I am not a Communist, but I do believe that Mooney's imprisonment is hurting the State of California. I was glad to see that Congresswoman O'Day, of New York, has appealed to President Roosevelt in Mooney's behalf.

The real point in the Mooney case is not so much the personal injustice to this one man (which is tragic enough to him), but the impression which has gone all over the country that you can keep a man in jail even after a frame-up is proved. It also suggests that if one man can be so denied his civil rights, then others can. It weakens the respect for the impartiality of the law. California is being hurt more than Mooney. JUSTICE.

Name Pronunciations.

Those who would discuss foreign affairs often hesitate to do so because they lack the ability to pronounce foreign names.

The Associated Press has compiled the correct pronunciations of a few names correctly in the news, they follow:

Edouard Herriot, French minister without portfolio—Eh-dwar Er-ri-o, "i" silent.

Joseph Pilsudski, Polish dictator Yuzef Pill-sood-ski—accent second syllables.

Ignace Mosciki, president of Poland—Eeg-na-tse Mos-tsee-tski—"a" as in "father," "o" as in "most," accent second syllable.

Barbara Hutton Mdvani, Woolworth heiress—She pronounces it Di-va-ni—"i" as in "if," "a" as in "vat," accent second syllable.

Eusebio Ayala, president of Paraguay — E-u-say-bi-o Ah-yah-lah—"e" as in "yet," accent on third and second syllables.

Perhaps some time in the near future we shall be informed of the pronunciation of the name of an American, a man who is a member of the Cabinet. His name is Ickes.

The Post Impressionist

The Muse Sardonic.

Post Office, Tuesday.

HERE is a fine sheaf of controversial arrows for the boss to order printed in our notoriously non-controversial quiver! The first poem comes from a Virginia lady who signs herself "One of the D. D." The second belongs to Robinson White. The third is Paul H. Oehser's.

I suggest Mr. Hopkins employ a detective
To search for politer and keener invective,
Since "damned," by us taxpayers often abused,
Should not by a Fine-Things-of-Lifer be used.

It ill becomes one of his prominent station
To utter such commonplace vituperation;
His powers of sarcasm seem somewhat stunted—
And thereby the point of his censure is blunted.

A blunder like this should be quickly corrected,
And always the fitting insult be selected.
Since otherwise those whom he meant to be humbling
Will chortle with glee at his pitiful fumbling.

Yet, after a while, they will cease to enjoy him,
And then they will really start in to annoy him.
One thing we all know, when it comes to the worst:
The bigger the swelling, the louder the burst!

No doubt we are a dumb lot,
Mr. Hopkins!
Your finger's on the sore spot,
Mr. Hopkins!
For, if we were wise enough,
You would find the going rough
With your pet "boon-doggler" stuff,
Mr. Hopkins!

Though we still pay up our tax,
Mr. Hopkins!
We are sharpening the ax,
(Mr. Hopkins)
Testing it with cautious thumb—
And we're telling you, by gum,
We are not quite too damned dumb,
Mr. Hopkins!

* * *

That was the work of the Virginia lady who signs herself as "One of the Damned Dumb." Now for Mr. White's variation on the same theme:

Why are we people so silly and dumb,
The country's upbuilders, the road-walking bum?
Why are we just critics of billions misspent
On projects quite doubtful—or millions misslent
To find why a fly simply flies when he flies
And other like problems of its, ands and whys?
Because we're darn' dumb, sir; plain asinine dumb!

Oh, why, should we worry o'er ten thousand millions?
They're simply a trifle compared with the trillions
That Hopkins will spend in that search as to why
God gave us two legs 'stead of six like a fly.
What won't Harry waste to turn arms into wings?
Then why don't we stop these incredible things?
Because we're damn' dumb, sir; just asenine dumb!

Lastly comes Mr. Oehser:

Virginia is a grand old State;
There is no other quite so great:
So I've been told, at any rate.
And why?
In history's lore she does not lack;
Her annals are without a brack;
Her famous sons are carried back
To die.

Her scenery boasts of mountain-ridges,
Caves and caverns, natural bridges,
Sinuous rivers, crooked edges,
Sycamores;
Her F. F. V.'s, that noble clique,
Have ancestries that are unique (Though half her houses are antique-Men's stores.)

Her luckier mansions are well kept,
Each place where Washington once slept;
Or Jefferson or R. Lee stepped,
Is guarded;
And mighty monuments of war
Remind the roving visitor
That there the battling conqueror
Bombarded.

She does not go in much for lambs;
Her agriculture runs to hams;
Her menus lean to oysters, clams
And shrimps.
Her climate is a gentle thing;
The Winter is almost like Spring,
And Summer has its fullest fling,
Nor scrimps.

Ah, Spring! This very day I feel
You tugging at my steering-wheel,
As lingering Winter's winds congeal
My blood.
And, though I praise in puny verse
This section of the universe,
I pull up 'side the road and curse
Her mud!

Knowing nothing about political economy—as how should we, since we once wrote a book on that subject?—we consider Mr. Hopkins the best looking political-economist since the era of Mr. Tugwell.

And, not owning an automobile, we have never noticed enough mud in Virginia to fling at it.

First Major Problem Now Faced By League

Revision Of World War Peace Treaties Would Show True Worth Of Geneva Assembly.

By Stephane Botchev.
Special Correspondent of The Post.

FOR the first time in the existence of the League of Nations a conflict of major importance between two great European powers has come before its council. France, by her request of March 20, has convened an extraordinary meeting of the council to examine her complaint against the German rearmament which was proclaimed on March 16.

The council session, which opens in Geneva today, will deal exclusively with this request, unless the Abyssinians should achieve the almost impossible by getting their complaints against Italy on the agenda. The session will not be long, for the results at Stresa make it appear that the great powers are already in approximate agreement on the character to be given to the final resolution.

There will probably be one meeting given over to an expose of the French complaint by M. Laval, and one or two other sessions during which the members of the council, according to tradition, will set forth, one after the other, their position in regard to the problem. After this a drafting committee of three members, or a single rapporteur, will be asked to establish a text acceptable to all the members. Once the text is agreed upon, it will be brought out for the official approval of the council in a public session which there will be more statements of position from all members of the council. After that the council will adjourn for the Easter holidays.

AT any rate this is the program which may be foreseen from the habitual practice of the council. If the session is longer, if any difficulties arise, they will turn on the issue of how sharp a form should be given to the condemnation of Germany. France, Great Britain and Italy are all agreed on the principle of the proclamation of the inadmissibility of the German action of March 16.

But it is not impossible that there may still be differences in regard to the precise terms of the resolution. On the other hand, it is anticipated that Poland may present obstacles to the acceptance of a resolution against Germany. Article 11, on which the French complaint is based, necessitates unanimity. Thus Poland may, if she so desires, prevent a council resolution. It is expected that the Polish delegate will probably abstain from voting, in case a condemnatory resolution is proposed.

The central theme of the complaint which France sponsors is that the German government has deliberately repudiated, by a unilateral act, the contractual engagement embodied in the treaties which Germany has signed. Germany, in virtue of the preamble to the covenant, undertook scrupulous respect for all her treaty obligations. Germany signed the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles. By the reconstitution of the German army proclaimed on March 16, Germany has violated a treaty obligation and, by this same act, the league covenant itself. From the juridical point of view, this argument certainly holds good.

BUT this is not so true when one looks at the problem from the moral and political points of view. And these are the viewpoints which are the most important. The Peace Conference disarmed Germany and placed her in a position of inequality. Admittedly, this was to be only temporary inequality, to be followed by equality as soon as the others disarmed. It is unnecessary to repeat here all the well-known German arguments. One is obliged to recognize that there is a foundation of justice in the German claim that they were forced to act as they did.

The preamble of Part V of the treaty, which contains the military clauses, declares expressly that Germany is to be disarmed in order to render possible the general limitation of the armaments of all nations. At the time when peace was concluded Clemenceau said the same thing in a letter to the German delegates. The League Covenant also recognizes that the maintenance of peace requires the reduction of national armaments. Germany was disarmed for a long time, during which general disarmament was very far from being achieved.

It is clear that, though the Germans may have repudiated a juridical obligation by overthrowing the military clauses of Versailles, the victors—France, Italy, England, etc.—have also failed to carry out a moral and political obligation.

• • • •

THIS situation has been frequently noted by objective observers, even in the victor countries. Condemnation of the German action by the council will thus not have any very considerable moral weight. However, it is remarked in Geneva that Germany might have done better—might have assured herself of a much clearer juridical position—if, before repudiating the treaty, she had requested the assembly, according to article 19 of the covenant, to invite the interested parties to revise the 1919 military clauses. Such a request, if it remained without concrete result, would still have rendered the German position impregnable.

I may remark in closing that the idea of the application of article 19 is beginning to make headway here, though a little belatedly. It is not unlikely that the extraordinary assembly convoked for May 20 may be confronted with a request for intervention by the league to revise the military clauses of all the other peace treaties. Such a move, if it really succeeded, would certainly go far to remove the contention that the league is nothing more than an instrumentality of the victors in the World War.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The Plan

IT is when one pieces together the various component parts of the New Deal that he gets a better appreciation of what is so wittingly called the plan. Viewed as a homogeneous entity, one sees the broader aspects of the many little separate agencies and endeavors which, when taken alone, seem so ridiculous. They seem, in fact, simply to dangle before the eye with the disorderliness of the stalacities and stalagmites in a cave. But when with a sweep of the eye one takes in the whole theater, they become a beauty to behold.

It is with a view of getting us into the proper mental attitude that the New Dealers have laid such great stress on the "long pull." The term itself denotes another forward step in our steady march toward the more abundant life. In the earlier times it was not used at all. Men then went through "long pulls" without the language to describe them. They grunted to one another as they went along conveying no more than a recognition of the fact they were going through something. Once, after a particularly long pull, one of the pullers who stood out ahead of his fellow pullers, who was, in fact, the progenitor of our present Brain Trust, remarked that that was just what it was they had been through—the long pull.

• • • •

We have advanced so far from the crude learning of those men that we do not now have to wait until the long pull is over before we can say that is what it was. We can tell it is the long pull before we even get into it.

Thus it is that our plans now are all being formulated for the long pull. And, as said before, when one considers them in the immediate perspective and in their uncoordinated scope they look crazy, to say the least.

There is, for example, the long-range necessity for retaining the NRA to prevent the return of child labor. Some critics contend the abolition of child labor, while an excellent thing, is a very much exaggerated accomplishment, that to keep citing it as the great need for retaining NRA is to say the mountain labored and produced a mouse. And at best, these critics hold, it is an accomplishment that NRA simply stumbled across.

• • • •

The denial of this is had and the importance of the accomplishment is more appreciated when it is realized that abolition of child labor is an integral part of the plan, or of the Third Economy, as Prof. Tugwell calls it. To have this realization one must take the long-pull perspective of the thing. He must, in short, consider it in connection with the public debt.

It has been generally assumed, of course, that this debt would be saddled upon posterity. The Republicans, seeking solely to embarrass the New Deal, have been planning for some time to cut down the size of this posterity. In other words, when the time came to pay the debt and the New Dealers looked hopefully around to posterity to present the bill, there would, under the Republican strategy, be a greatly reduced posterity to present it to. This would manifestly be quite embarrassing to the New Dealers and might result in their having to pay the bill themselves. Because of their timidity and general lack of aggressiveness the impression is this is all the strategy the Republicans have. They intend to wait around until the New Dealers have their trouble with a greatly reduced posterity.

• • • •

Here is where the New Dealers, however, have once again anticipated their plan and taken steps to offset it. If the Republicans planned to practice an economy of scarcity in the matter of posterity it was greatly necessary that the New Dealers do everything to preserve the posterity already assured.

They could not stand idly by and permit the youngsters to come up under the unhealthy conditions of the mines and sweatshops. They had to get the youngsters out on the playgrounds, out in the sunshine, so they may grow up to have strong bodies and broad shoulders.

If the debt is to be saddled upon them you can appreciate how important this is. It's like restoring health to a condemned man so he can be taken to the scaffold to die.

No End of Books

Fletcher Pratt's "Ordeal By Fire" Makes A Bright And Exciting Story Of The Civil War.

By Theodore Hall.

THERE are two ways of writing history. You can go digging through files, folios and libraries, pack your manuscript with facts and figures (which you honestly believe to be true, though you're working in a field from which truth pretty largely evaporated the instant an act was born) until it resembles the financial statement of a holding corporation—and have your book left on the shelves to gather respectable dust.

Or you can scurry around through the same materials, keep your head and know what you want to prove, sharpen your eyes for the telling and vital incident and simplify your subject into lines of force as plain as an end-run—and have your book read with delight and excitement. I know what I'd want to do, and I'm heartily glad that Fletcher Pratt did it in "Ordeal by Fire: An Informal History of the Civil War" (Smith & Haas, $3).

His book flashes with edged phrases as do the histories of Philip Guedalla; it regards its subject as intelligently as Bernard DeVoto sees the American frontier in the splendid first part of "Mark Twain's America;" it catches the sheer picturesqueness of the American as cleanly as Constance Rourke's "American Humor;" it has the bite and personal stingo of Thomas Beer's "Mauve Decade;" and it reveals large events by that excellent device, the contemporary note or clipping, so effective in Mark Sullivan's "Our Times."

You will see that I think "Ordeal by Fire" a rather fine book. I picked it up at midnight a couple of days ago, thinking I'd give it a preliminary glance, and at 4 o'clock in the morning I was going strong and having a grand time.

• • • •

MR. PRATT writes for the military journals, is a student of strategy, and an amateur of cryptography. But that, like a university degree, explains nothing. You will have to read the book (as perhaps you read his "Heroic Years," a vivid history of America, 1801-15) to see the vein of practiced brilliance in which he writes. I'm not going to say that the historians will like it—oh yes, he has his sources at hand, and all were gone over by competent authority (oddly, by an expert at the New York Public Library named J. S. L. Vigilante) —and if the full detail men turn a strange color at the gills it will be the green of envy. But the lay reader, who doesn't much care to know the name of every company commander at Chancellorsville but who would like to see just what turned the battle, will relish the book from start to finish.

For Mr. Pratt discards the clogging details, charges into the heart of things, and shows you the broad effect of our most complicated Civil War campaigns in a way which you will remember. Neat little diagrams illustrate most of the battles.

Here is an example of the light but telling style—General "Old Brains" Halleck before Corinth: "For three weeks he paused beneath the trees, like the hunter of the Jabberwock in uffish thought, then as he had 100,000 men and Confederate Beauregard something under 55,000, began closing in on the rebel stronghold with elaborate caution, an inch a century. In 31 days his powerful army, which included more talent to the square inch than any other the United States has ever seen, managed to crawl 20 miles. Parallels were opened and everything prepared for a lovely siege when Beauregard inconsiderately evacuated and retired into an inexpregnable position among the Mississippi swamps. Gen. Halleck spent another three weeks thinking over this astounding development, and reached the conclusion that Memphis should be the next objective."

Certainly there is scant regard in these pages for some of the ponderous stupidities or silly affectations, on either side. Which, to say the least, makes the book refreshing.

• • • •

MR. PRATT is going to make a lot of people hopping mad —those who know the tune of "The Bonny Blue Flag" and still fight the War of Secession with the Rebel Yell at the tip of their tongues. He has no great praise for the intelligence or the effectiveness of the South.

Why, he asks, with a proslavery majority in Congress, with a President in office who was thought to be an ineffectual "obscene ape from Illinois," with a succession of Northern compromises to Southern demands making the South's position stronger and stronger, should they have ever thrown down the gauntlet? "Why jump out of a sixteenth-story window when the bogey-man across the street is only making faces at you? . . . There was plenty of executive ability in the South, but so little talent for organization, so scanty a diplomatic sense, that even with war and death staring them in the face Davis and his merry men had not intelligence enough to conceive any device that would protect them but the possession of this one office"—the Presidency.

And the South was not beaten so much by superior numbers (the population of the North was but 25 per cent greater), nor by lack of resources, nor by military leadership—as by its very tenets of personal aristocracy and individualism.

"For if the Southern individualist knew how to handle arms without instruction, the Northern collectivist was equally familiar with the process of unquestioning reliance on his fellows, seeking development and self-expression in most fully executing the will of the mass mentality — whether represented by the body politic in Government or the high command in war. The Southerner, claiming the right to make all decisions for himself, often made them on insufficient data. Joe Johnston has told how his soldiers wanted to go home after Bull Run, under the impression the war had been decided. In a military sense it would have been quite possible for him to march into Washington on the heels of McDowell's fugitives; in a psychological sense it was altogether impossible; his Army was more disorganized by victory than McDowell's by defeat. Individualism dare not admit that one man has more ability to form judgments, even in a specialized field, than another man. It must deny the value of specialization."

"Ordeal by Fire" is a provocative, exciting and illuminating book. I urge you to read it and discover a fine new talent in history for yourself.

One Hoss Shay

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

EVERYONE is familiar with Holmes' poe on the "One Hoss Shay." When I was a small boy at school I was called upon by the teacher to read it aloud and the humor of it affected me so that I laughed so hard I could not read it distinctly. The teacher penalized me. I still think I should have been rewarded.

In order to show how differently people felt about things in general 200 years ago from the way they feel nowadays, I should like to quote the following extracts from a diary given in Sanborn's "Life of Thoreau." These passages were written exactly two centuries ago, in Massachusetts, in the year 1735. I do not think that today the New England conscience is quite so active.

A clergyman bought a one-hoss shay and this is his state of mind concerning it:

"January 31. Bought a shay for 27 pounds 10 shillings. The lord grant it may be a comfort and blessing to my family.

"March, 1735. Had a safe and comfortable journey to York.

"April 24. Shay overturned, with my wife and I in it, yet neither of us much hurt. Blessed be our gracious Preserver! Part of the shay, as it lay upon one side, went over my wife, and yet she was scarcely anything hurt. How wonderful the preservation!

"May 5. Went to the beach with three of the children. The beast being frighted, when we were all out of the shay, overturned and broke it. I desire (I hope I desire it) that the Lord would teach me suitably to repent this providence, to make suitable remarks on it and to be suitably affected with it. Have I done well to get me a shay? Have I not been proud or too fond of this convenience? Do I exercise the faith in the divine care and protection which I ought to do? Should I not be more in my study, and less fond of diversion? Do I not withhold more than is meet from pious and charitable uses?

"May 15. Shay brought home; mending cost 30 shillings. Favored in this beyond expectation.

"May 16. My wife and I rode to Rumney Marsh. The beast frighted several times.

"June 4. Disposed of my shay to the Rev. Mr. White."

Publicity Of Salary Lists Irks Business

Securities Commission May Exercise Discretion, But Privacy Is Gone For Good.

By Elliott Thurston.

MUCH the same sort of ire that led to the revolt against the income tax "pink slip" is sweeping over that large part of the business community which is obliged to report salaries to the Securities Exchange Commission. The commission has heard from many indignant business officials who naturally resent the publicity. They feel, understandingly enough, that what they receive in salary is none of the public's business, that it is a private, personal matter, and that the publicity amounts to a snooping that raises all sorts of envious, invidious or otherwise objectionable comparisons.

However, a more than cursory effort to ascertain sentiment in Congress reveals clearly that there is an overwhelming weight of sentiment against modifying the law in this connection. On the contrary, the disposition is to make it tighter, if anything. There is no present prospect that Congress could be induced to recede. Congressional leaders representing various schools all appear to be agreed that corporations which offer their securities to the public should be required to reveal their operating costs for salaries, bonuses, commissions, etc., and that while in theory such facts have been available to stockholders in the past, in practice the information has been extremely difficult or impossible to obtain.

• • • •

AS the present procedure is explained at the Securities Commission, it is within the discretion of the commission to hold such information in confidence if good reason is shown for doing so. Thus a corporation which is able to convince the commission that publication of salary lists would actually be detrimental to the business would be permitted to submit the lists in confidence. The commission does not at present go out of its way to give publicity to salary data. But the law requires the information to be reported and, in the absence of some showing sufficient to persuade the commission that publicity would be injurious to the business, the information is open to inspection of the press. Such publicity as has been given recently to salaries paid to corporation executives has been dug out of corporate registration statements by diligent reporters rather than publicized by the commission.

In some cases corporations, in filing their statements, have included notations protesting publication of salaries. This has served chiefly to call attention to them, and to spur on the news hunters who might otherwise be disinclined to dig for the data.

The opinion prevails in the commission that business executives would be beter advised not to agitate the subject, but to accept the prevailing system under which the commission is willing to exercise discretion in cases which it considers meritorious. Otherwise, in this view, even the present discretion may be taken away. Moreover, the commission appears to feel that in time the press will be less and less inclined to publish salary lists, conspicuously at least, as so much news, and the information will simply be available as it was intended to be ostensibly for the protection of present or prospective stockholders who would not otherwise have ready access to it.

A GOOD deal of the current complaint appears to be based on the feeling that wrong impressions are created by disclosure of information hitherto considered personal, private and privileged. That is, many of those who object think that the public resents large salaries, fails to understand that they are often a minor item in a large corporation and that $100,000 or more paid to the ablest, top men may in fact be a cheap price to pay for talent capable of successfully operating a large business. Some of the objectors fear that "class" warfare is stimulated, and share-the-wealth demagoguery promoted by such misunderstanding.

Undoubtedly, there is ground for this viewpoint, yet if the whole problem is viewed from the standpoint of a choice between evils, taking into consideration political sentiment, it seems clear that the present system, new and objectionable as it is for some standpoints, is a logical compromise. The commission presumably, and Congress certainly, would not be sympathetic to the idea that there should be no provision for making this information available for the protection of investors. Congress is no longer tolerant of the notion that corporations which offer securities to the public at large are private in the sense that they should be immune from fully revealing the essential facts concerning their financial condition and operating charges, of which salaries are sometimes a large part. The abuses of the past again have come home to roost.

THE overwhelming opinion in Congress is plainly that the public must be afforded the opportunity to be protected from the extreme examples of excessive salaries and bonuses, which, when disclosed in some corporations, have provoked rebellious indignation among stockholders, who appeared to feel that they had been victimized under the old methods of secrecy. Similarly, disclosures of such abuses have served to inflame labor against seemingly inequitable distribution of earnings.

The view which prevails in Congress, as well as in the commission, is that no legitimate business will suffer under the present procedure, or, rather, that less evil will ensue than under the rules of the past. The commission's discretion can be invoked where a real showing of damage can be made. And it is apparent that in the present temper and mood of politics no crusade to do away with the present publicity provisions could hope to succeed. On the contrary, it might make matters worse.

Gala Concert Pan America Day Feature

Speech by Hull Precedes Program of Soprano and Violinist.

Mrs. Roosevelt Heads List of Prominent Guests at Function.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Pan-American Day has been set aside by presidential proclamation in this country and by similar proclamations in all the other republics of the American continent. The "Day of the Americas" was celebrated brilliantly with a concert last night in the Pan-American Union.

The Hall of the Americas was brilliantly lighted and gay with smartly gowned women who gathered to hear the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, chairman of the board of governors of the Pan American Union, deliver a brief address on Pan-American relations. The concert which followed was given by the Mexican soprano, Margarita Cueto, and Remo Bolognini, Argentine violinist, assisted by the United Service orchestra of 90 pieces made up of musicians of the United States Army, Navy and Marine Corps bands, under the leadership of the three conductors of the service organization, Lieut. Thomas F. Darcy, Lieut. Charles Benter, and Capt. Taylor Branson.

Senorita Cueto is well-known to Washington audiences, having appeared previously on Pan-American programs. She sang leading roles in the National Opera House of Mexico City before entering the concert tours which brought her to this country. She is considered one of the best interpreters on the concert stage of the folk songs of the Latin-American lands. Recently she returned from Spain, where she featured songs of her native land and other Latin-American countries in frequent concert appearances.

Gave Concert at Age of 13.

Senor Bolognini, a native of Buenos Aires, began his musical career at the age of 7. His first public appearance was made at the age of 13 and created a deep impression for his interpretation and mastership of the violin. After appearing in South America and touring Italy, he returned to Buenos Aires and became concert master of the Philharmonic Orchestra of that city. He came to the United States in 1927 as assistant concert master of he Chicago Symphony Orchesra. Two years later Senor Bolognini again went to Europe and studied under the great Belgian violinist Ysaye for two years, subsequently giving concerts at The Hague and in Cologne, Paris, Rotterdam, Berlin, Brussels and London. He was engaged by Toscanini as second concert master to appear as a soloist with the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society. He has just returned from a tour of the principal cities of South America.

Mrs. Roosevelt and a party of guests attended the concert, when other prominent guests were also present.

Milky Lotion Soothes Skin, Holds Powder

Easter Eggs With Bottles of Perfume Inside Are Novelty.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

ONE WAY to banish winter from your skin is to use a certain delightful wind and weather lotion which softens and soothes the skin and keeps it looking as fresh and rested as a child's.

Besides preventing and curing chapping, it serves as a powder base par excellence. It's so smooth and milky that it goes over the skin evenly and smoothly, forming a soft surface to which the powder adheres closely. In fact one of the surest and easiest ways to give your face a perfectly groomed finish is to rub a bit of lotion from forehead to chin, blot off any excess with a cleansing tissue and then fluff your powder on with a downy puff.

Wind and weather lotion comes in one lovely, natural shade which blends perfectly with any complexion—light, dark or medium. It has the inviting fragrance of trailing arbutus.

This dainty cosmetic comes in a large cylindrical-shaped bottle which has grooves up and down the side to make it easier for the hands to grip.

Perfume in Easter Egg.

One of the loveliest of all the Easter offerings to appear in local shops is the Easter egg which contains three small bottles of exquisite perfume.

This lovely gift suggestion was designed by a Russian prince—who was also a prince of perfumers—in accordance with an old Russian custom of presenting jeweled eggs to friends at Easter time.

His "perfume eggs" are brightly enameled wood, red, green, yellow, blue or white. Hidden inside are the three little crown bottles of perfume.

Two for Price of One.

One dollar and forty-five cents might, under some circumstances, buy you a small box of very good powder. Or—it might buy you a lovely little compact. We know of one instance i which this amount will buy a medium-sized box of very fine face powder, and, believe it or not, a dainty little compact to boot.

The powder is made by an English manufacturer of cosmetics and perfumes who has been so long and successfully engaged in this business that his name now stands for the highest quality of products. That's why purchasing not only a liberal box of powder but a compact also for only $1.45 seems too good to be true.

Easter Bunnies Meet.

The Easter bunny and all his uncles and cousins are having a grand get-together in a downtown store. Here one large table has been given over to this family reunion. There's Peter Rabbit dressed up, "fit to kill," in a bright checked suit, a derby cocked on one side of his head and a monocle in his eye. Another Mr. Rabbit is a modern Beau Brummel i norange waistcoat and striped trousers.

Mrs. Peter Rabbit and her subdeb daughters are just too flossed up for words. They're dressed very much alike in fluffy organdies made along Regency lines.

Besides the rabbit family there are also David and Mrs. Quak-a-Field, large downy ducks, which are sure to delight some kiddie on Easter morning.

One group of bunnies have gathered together in a large straw basket and are making themselves comfortable on some downy green paper grass. Yards and yards of bright yellow cellophane is wrapped around the basket and tied across the top in an enormous bow.

Just about anything you could desire in the way of Easter reminders is here at Peter Rabbit's get-together.

New Coats a Bargain.

Sometimes it pays to prowl around from department to department, just looking and hunting for hidden-away bargains. Very seldom is an honest-to-goodness bargain thrust out in the public eye. It's generally tucked away back of a few other things just as were the bargain coats which we discovered in an inconspicuous corner of a local store.

These coats made of fingertip wide-wale corduroy are so soft and silky looking that even though they are listed as sports attire they'd make stunning little summer evening wraps.

They are three-quarters in length and come in white, blue, green, brown, in misses sizes.

Gay Evening of Paris.

Evening of Paris, an alluringly gay, sophisticated fragrance long has been a general favorite with men who are captivated by its spicy richness and haunting subtlety. So ladies rejoice, for thanks to a special offer you may buy a large box of bath powder and a bottle of Eau de Cologne, both in the Evening of Prais fragrance, for only $1.10.

The Eau de Cologne is tucked away in a pocket of the puff so that you don't see it until you've opened the box of snowy textured bath powder.

Shading the Bid.

The 1935 streamlined version of the Approach-Forcing System has reduced the requirements for biddable suits. Nevertheless, there still must be a limit. For instance, it is unwise to open the bidding with a major suit or make a first round response in a major suit when holding something like four to the Ace without any other honor. There are certain situations, however, in which shaded suits must be bid. When making forced responses in the later rounds of bidding or when trying for a slam, very often the best call available to the player is to show his skimpy suit, particularly when it is headed by the Ace.

On the hand below, Waldemar von Zedtwitz and Samuel Fry, jr., of New York, got to slam in the only suit in which it could be made, despite considerable nuisance bidding by their opponents. Neither player had a strictly biddable spade suit, and yet six-odd in spades was reached and five-odd was the limit of the hand in any other suit.

4♠(4)	Pass	5♠(5)	Pass
6♠(6)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—A nuisance jump overcall inserted merely to make the North-South task more difficult.
2—The overcall in the opponents' bid suit. North cannot raise diamonds and feels three hearts would not be strong enough. He consequently temporizes by forcing another response from his partner.
3—North naturally shows his own suit, having already hinted at a slam by the previous four-club bid.
4—South heeds his partner's strong bidding. Having much more than a minimum hand himself, he shows his shaded spade suit, knowing his partner will not raise him without good support. He cannot support hearts and does not wish to bid diamonds a third time, and in addition, he wishes to suggest the spade suit is controlled.
5—North's natural bid. Four trumps to the King should take care of even a very weak spade suit.
6—South shows faith in his partner's bidding soundness by contracting for the slam in spades. He knows that since he himself has not shown spades until the third round, his partner has made allowances for a very weak suit before raising it to five. North must have as good as four to the King. South cannot give his partner a guess by bidding six diamonds, as North might then suspect that South was merely showing an Ace instead of an almost biddable four-card suit.

The Play.

There is nothing to the play of the hand. The trumps broke three and two and a spade trick was all opponents could get when West opened the singleton heart, rather than the King of clubs. Six hearts, six diamonds or six notrump are not makable.

Comment.

When eight trumps are held in the combined hands, even though the intermediate honors are missing, the hand should be played in that suit if the partners can possibly get together on it.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Does It Pay, Asks 17-Year-Old, to Strive for Good Manners, When Family and Friends Ridicule Your Efforts?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH:

I am the oldest boy in a large family. I am 17 years old. My father and mother are trying to send us all through high school, after which we will have to shift for ourselves.

• • • •

I do much reading, and have since I was a child, and I have decided a man without good manners is a clod who will never get anywhere in this world. So I have tried to acquire good manners. My family and relatives have never been much on formalities—about table manners, little matters of expressing gratitude courteously, and so on.

• • • •

But I got a book on etiquette out of the local library and studied it closely. I have tried to put the things I learned into practice. Result is, my family have been kidding the life out of me; and I get laughed at a good deal by my classmates at school. Only one person seems to understand my ambition. That is a teacher of mine. She has been a good friend of mine in every way. When I have shown her little courtesies, she thanked me quietly, and seemed to see nothing funny in it.

• • • •

It was noticing how she stood out from other people because of her unfailing courtesy to everybody that caused me to try to bring myself up to her standards. Do you think I'm a fool? Would it be better to live up to the saying—When in Rome do as the Romans do, and be as rough and ready as most of the people I associate with—or will I win out in the end by trying to break into a class where good manners are the rule and not the exception?

• • • •

To tell the truth, most of the girls I know don't seem to care whether a fellow has very good manners or not, and some of the boys have taken to calling me

MISS PRIM.

Necessary Achievement.

DEAR MISS PRIM: To achieve consistent ease, graciousness and poise in social contacts is to prove, in a measure, one's moral caliber; because, in the words of Goethe, ". . . there is no outward sign of courtesy that does not rest on a deep moral foundation."

• • • •

Your entirely praiseworthy desire to master the technique of well-bred social behavior means you have reached a stage of human evolution where you aspire to be truly civilized

• • • •

"Good manners" (to quote from the author of an excellent new textbook on etiquette), "are not only indispensable in society, but they have a very practical value in the business world. Breeding is an essential part of the equipment of anyone who wishes to go far in his particular work or profession . . . Many failures can be attributed to boorishness, to lack of consideration for one's fellows, to neglect of the courtesies essential to civilized living."

• • • •

Regard for the rights of others is the primary and basic law of civilized conduct. Well-bred behavior is its possessor's avowal of mankind's need to exert self-control and self-restraint in every situation, to consider others' comfort and happiness above one's own, to play the game by approved and accepted rules.

• • • •

Remembering that manners are the tools of social adjustment, man's means of happily orienting himself to his fellows and his surroundings, you may be eternally grateful to circumstances which brought you early in life under the influence of a teacher who awakened you to a realization of their importance.

• • • •

Don't be dismayed nor deterred from your purpose by the rude or nonsensical jibing of classmates or relatives less aware of the vital nuances of living than yourself. You are far from being a fool. You are, rather, unusually wise. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

What TODAY Means

"Aries."

IF APRIL 16 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 2:45 to 4:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:45 to 9:45 a. m., from 11:45 a. m. to 1:45 p. m. and from 4:45 to 6:45 p. m.

Accuracy of detail is very important on this date, if you wish to have a peaceful mind. Distortion or exaggeration of facts, or conditions, are likely to result in troublesome complications and should be avoided. Speculative elements are liable to exercise a peculiar condition affecting prices, in certain lines of trade, so contracts based on future deliveries should be entered into cautiously.

Any display of intolerance of a friend's attitude toward a religious or political belief will be a mistake. If you will assume a broad-minded attitude, should a discussion arise regarding a person's disregard of certain conventionalities, your good judgment may prevent an embarrassing situation, fraught with the danger of incurring some one's enmity.

Married and engaged couples, as well as those trying to win some one's favor, will be wise not to question anybody's veracity on this date, and if there is any doubt in their mind regarding the truthfulness of a statement keep the suspicion to themselves.

If a woman and April 16 is your birthday, you were born to enjoy many good things in life, and any lack of them may be only temporary. Guard against allowing your imagination to play tricks on you, causing you to think you have aches or pains that might lead to serious physical ailments, when many times it may be only nature protesting against overexertion or lack of proper rest. Tea room, restaurant, gift or specialty shop, interior decorating, secretarial work or teaching may offer advantageous means of earning a livelihood. A home and husband should bring contentment.

The child born on April 16 usually, when it arrives at school age, evinces too readily its likes, as well as dislikes, so should be taught the importance of being tactful.

If a man and April 16 is your natal day, regularity in habits, combined with the proper amount of exercise, is essential if you wish to keep in good physical condition, which is important for you in order to achieve the degree of success which should be yours. Married life is the logical one for you to lead. Painting, architecture, engineering, the pulpit, as well as the legal profession may have a great deal to offer you in the way of opportunity.

League For Woman Ruler Of U. S. Lists Requisites

A woman who hopes to be President of the United States needn't have beauty, youth, a family, or a husband in the opinion of Lillian D. Rock, above. Miss Rock is founder of the League for a Woman President.

Picture Portrays Attractive but Not Beautiful Person Between 40 and 70 of Proven Ability and Broad Understanding.

WHEN THE United States elects a woman President she will be attractive but not beautiful, will be between 40 and 70 years old and will be able to do things in a big way. This is the picture drawn of the first woman Chief Executive by the League for a Woman President.

Although the league, headed by Lillian D. Rock, Brooklyn attorney, has announced it aspires only to having a woman become Vice President in 1936, the members are already outlining requisite qualities for the woman who is eventually elected to the Presidency.

These requisite qualities, according to Miss Rock, are proven ability, broadest understanding, tremendous endurance, composure and ability to gain confidence.

Family of No Consequence.

It won't matter whether the woman has a family. She may or may not have a husband; it won't influence the voters one way or the other, Miss Rock is convinced.

The "woman vote," Miss Rock asserted recently, will be an important factor in electing a woman President.

"Forty nine per cent of the voters are women," Miss Rock said. "Some day they'll realize their power. They should vote for a woman. They will."

What about the men? Many of them will vote for a woman presidential candidate, the league believes.

"No one knows how many," Miss Rock added. Recently she received a letter from a man in Georgia which said "man domination of the affairs of the Nation has been a complete failure." This letter is one of the league's most prized possessions.

Several weeks ago Miss Rock announced the league would back Judge Florence Allen, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Ohio, or Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, for either the Presidency or the Vice Presidency.

To that list Miss Rock added a few days ago the names of Pearl M. Hart, public defender of the Morals Court of Chicago; Dean Virginia Gildersleeve, of Barnard College; Dr. Mary Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke College, and Ruth Bryan Owen, Minister to Denmark.

Friday Calls For a Platter Of Cross Buns

Breakfast Custom Always Popular in the U. S.; Recipe Suggested.

By Dorothea Duncan.

"HOT CROSS BUNS" are still cried about the streets in many English towns on the morning of Good Friday. Old English families are still shadowed by the early superstition that a hot cross bun taken on Good Friday and hung by the fireside until the next Lenten season will be an omen of good luck. All during the Lenten season, each fast day is marked by the appearance of a plate of hot cross buns and a platter of fish for dinner.

The old custom to which the English adhere coupled with the nursery rhyme

"One a penny, two a penny, hot cross buns,
If your daughters don't like them
Buy them for your sons,
One a penny, two a penny, hot cross buns."

which is credited to the English, but sung by the children the world 'round, leads us to believe the hot cross bun had its origin in England.

Dates Back to Ancient Times.

The custom, however, dates back to the times of the early Greeks and Romans. The worshipers of Diana, goddess of the moon, believed the moon to be divided into four parts. In honor of this gooddess they ate bread marked with a cross at their public sacrifices, such bread being usually purchased at the doors of the temple and taken in with them. This custom was alluded to by St. Paul in his First Epistle to the Corinthians. The cross bread was eaten by the pagan Saxons, too, in honor of Easter, their goddess of light. The Mexicans and Peruvians are shown to have had a similar custom. The custom was probably universal, and the early church using the sign of the cross to signify its Christian faith, adopted the custom of serving hot bread with a cross cut in the top.

The hot cross bun custom always has been popular in the United States, and Good Friday morning should see a platter of hot cross buns on your breakfast table. Here is the recipe:

Hot Cross Buns.

1 cup scalded milk
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
1 cake yeast sifted in ¼ cup warm water
4½ cups flour (about)
3 egg yolks
½ cup shortening

Add scalded milk to salt, sugar and shortening. When lukewarm, add yeast and one and one-half cups of flour. Beat well and let rise until very light. Add the egg yolks and the remaining flour. Knead lightly and let rise until double in bulk. Roll out dough to one inch thickness and cut into rounds. Set these close together on a greased pan and let rise. Glaze the surface of each bun with a little egg white diluted with water.

With a sharp knife cut a cross on top of each bun. Bake about 20 minutes in a hot oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit). Just before removing from the oven, brush with sugar and water. Fill the cross with a plain frosting. A cup of raisins may be added to the dough, if desired.

Dorothea Duncan will be glad to help you with your culinary problems. Write to her, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, in care of The Washington Post.

Wood Tick Fever Is Slowly Spreading

Number of Cases Have Been Observed Along Atlantic Seaboard.

Chill, Fever, Aches and High Temperature Are Symptoms.

Wood Tick Fever.

IN 1906-07 Howard Taylor Ricketts, experimenting with animals near Missoula, Mont., demonstrate that Rocky Mountain spotted fever was spread through the bite of infected wood ticks—Dermacentor andersoni. He showed that the disease was transmitted from an infected female to the eggs and hence to the young ticks.

Rocky Mountain fever has been recognized for but little more than 50 years, although it seems to be constantly present in the wood ticks of the Bitter Root Valley of Montana. It is difficult to verify Indian tradition, but it appears that the disease was known to the Blackfoot, the Nez Perce, and the Shoshoni Indians in the early seventies, and that they were particularly careful to avoid certain localities, especially in the spring months.

The disease is no longer confined to a small area. Its spread has been slow but sure, and it is to be found throughout many parts of the Rocky Mountain region and to the eastward. In 1933 five cases were reported from the State of Iowa. A recent report in the Colorado Medical Journal relates that in 30 years one physician had seen nearly 200 cases.

In sections where the disease is common, recognition is not difficult. Since 1931, however, many cases of true Rocky Mountain spotted fever have been observed along the Atlantic seaboard. These were at first thought to be typhus fever. An accurate diagnosis may be made by inoculating a guinea pig with the blood of a suspected patient and observing the behavior of the animal.

The onset of the disease is characterized by chills and fever, headache, backache, and general muscle and joint pains. The patient is prostrated and the temperature range is from 102 to 105 degrees, with a correspondingly rapid pulse. As the temperature subsides there is a period of remission, followed by a return of the symptoms—as a rule not quite so severe. Skin eruptions appear as early as the second or third day, first on the wrists and ankles, later on the extremities, then on the body and the face. These lesions may be very tiny, but are often a quarter of an inch in diameter. At first they are rose color, later becoming dark red or purplish. In severe cases the eruptions run together, causing a patchy or marbled appearance of the skin.

Vaccine Use Increasing.

Through the work of R. R. Spencer and R. R. Parker, of the United State Public Health Service a vaccine has been prepared and its use is rapidly increasing. Two doses are usually given, and in one community — Sheridan, Wyo. — more than 4,000 persons have been vaccinated since 1927. The vaccine helps protect against the infection, but has no power once the disease has become established. Even this vaccine is not always protective.

There is no specific treatment, and symptoms will need to be managed as they arise.

Because of the relatively fatal character of the disease everyone must be on the alert against the spread of the infection. Individuals who live in wood tick infested areas should be protected by proper clothing. Fortunately the ticks do not thrive on cleared or cultivated land, but there is much evidence to believe that they are being spread—possibly through wild animals, chiefly rodents, to wooded sections throughout the country.

In infested regions the disease appears as early as March and continues until October. Campers particularly should use special precautions. If bitten by a wood tick the insect should be removed promptly and the area of the bite thoroughly cauterized. The ticks may be readily recognized. They are reddish brown in color, the male having the back marked with black and silvery white lines, the female having a small shield on the back marked with silver and an abdomen of reddish brown.

Search Locates Once-Rich Man Hiding in Wood

Dispute With Governor of Michigan Drove Him Away, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Clare, Mich., April 15.—John Gillespie, former millionaire Detroit politician, found tdoay in a backwoods hunting lodge after a 11-day search, said he would shun "civilization" until a dispute with Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald is settled.

The quarrel with the Governor grew out of the executive's assertion that Gillespie was attempting to exert undue influence upon employes of the State liquor control commission.

"I ordered Gillespie thrown out of the Detroit office of the commission," Gov. Fitzgerald said today upon being informed that Gillespie had demanded he either prove or retract his charge; "I did the right thing. I stand by it."

Search Led by Son.

Unshaven and disheveled, Gillespie was discovered by a searching party headed by his 24-year-old son, John P. Gillespie, who flew here from California upon learning his father had vanished after a quarrel with the Governor at Lansing. After Gillespie disappeared, a State officer was stationed at the door of the Governor's office.

Gillespie took two pistols and 250 rounds of ammunition with him when he disappeared.

"I wanted to become the expert marksman I was when I was police commissioner of Detroit," Gillespie explained today.

Gillespie said he roamed through the wooded country for days, sleeping in fishermen's shacks, avoiding human contacts until his grizzled beard had grown sufficiently to make recognition difficult.

$6,000,000 Now 26 Cents.

"I did it for just one reason," he explained. "I wanted to go somewhere and pull myself together. I had to, to prevent myself doing something hasty."

Gillespie said he did not know the search was in progress or that his son had joined it until Saturday when he was hiding along the Muskegon River near the point where he left the automobile he borrowed from his brother, David H. Gillespie.

Gillespie, whose fortune in 1929 was estimated at $6,000,000, has been in financial difficulties lately. A few months ago, when his house furnishings were sold at auction, Gillespie said he had just 26 cents in cash. Subsequently he opened a gasoline service station in Detroit.

Fred W. Frahm, chief of detectives in Detroit, and Prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea conferred today on whether David Gillespie committed any offense in not reporting that Gillespie had borrowed his car for the flight. "These disappearances that aren't disappearances are too expensive," said Frahm.

Bremer Kidnap Trial Started, 1 Pleads Guilty

Defendants Reduced to 10 as Austin Is Indicated as U. S. Witness.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, April 15.—A plea of guilty by one defendant and failure to arraign another apparently reduced the list of defendants in the Edward G. Bremer kidnaping trial to 10 as the case opened in Federal court here today.

Byron Bolton, Chicago, alleged to be one of the actual kidnapers and charged with conspiracy in the case, pleaded guilty to the latter charge. He faces a possible sentence, deferred by the court until completion of the trial, of from one year to life, at the discretion of the court. Kidnaping carries the same penalty.

Bruno (Whitie) Austin, under conspiracy indictment in the case, who was removed here from Chicago last week, was brought into the courtroom from the county jail under heavy guard with others held in the case. When Judge M. M. Joyce read the names of the defendants, Austin was not among them, since he has not been arraigned, it was indicated he may be used as a Government witness.

After Eugene Matthews, attorney for Oliver Berg, alleged conspirator brought here from the Joliet, Ill., prison, had demanded a bill of particulars, Judge Joyce proceeded to question prospective jurors.

Twelve tentative jurors, including three women, were accepted but the defense still had four of its ten peremptory challenges left while the Government exercised four of its six. Two alternate jurors will be chosen tomorrow, with additional challenges to be allowed.

No one was sure how long the jury selection would require, but estimates as to the length of the entire trial ranged up to four weeks. About 25 witnesses, including 10 women, were present in court today, awaiting their calls to testify. Among spectators were the wife and daughter of Philip J. Delaney, Chicago, indicted for conspiracy.

Other defendants are: Arthur (Doc) Barker, Harold E. Allderon and Elmer Farmer, all charged with actual kidnaping, as well as conspiracy; Mrs. Edna Murray, Jess Doyle, Edward A. Vidler, James J. Wilson and John J. McLaughlin, accused of conspiracy.

By the Associated Press.

Syracuse, N. Y., April 15.—Dutch Schultz, dapper ex-beer lord of the Bronx, today lost a battle in the United States court to hold off for another week his trial on charges of evading payment of taxes on income rolled up during three lush years of prohibition.

The Government itself, however, elected to sever the last seven counts from the indictment. On the four remaining counts he may be sentenced, if convicted, to a total of 16 years and $40,000 fine.

Fidgeting with his fingers and hunched over his counsel's table, Schultz followed each move of his attorneys. When Judge Frederick H. Bryant denied the motion for a week's delay in the trial his hand went to his face.

Schultz was rearraigned to meet certain technical requirements arising out of the filing of his demurrer. The formality was over in a second.

Rising from his seat facing the bench, the defendant walked forward a dozen steps, said, "Not guilty," then resumed his former place with a smirk on his face.

"I've been in worser spots than this," he said, but declined to elaborate. After court had adjourned Schultz and John H. McEvers, special prosecutor from Washington, shook hands.

Baruch Asserts Profitless Wars Invite Trouble

Financier Declares Senate Plan Would Cause Defeat or Chaos.

By the Associated Press.

A bitter attack by Bernard M. Baruch on the Senate Munitions Committee's plan for taking the profits out of war was placed before members of that group yesterday, but failed to move them.

The man chosen by President Wilson to head his War Industries Board supplemented his recent criticism of the committee plan by submitting a statement declaring it was intended to "abolish the present economic system in war" and was likely to bring defeat or Communism.

His statement was given to Chairman Nye (Republican), North Dakota.

Senator Pope Disagrees.

But while some of the members had not read Baruch's utterances, they were frank to disagree with his attack. Advised that Baruch considered the proposal for rigid taxation and industrial control unnecessary, Senator Pope (Democrat, Idaho, a committee member, disagreed flatly by saying:

"I do."

John T. Flynn, economist who drafted the plan, was asked to answer Baruch. It was indicated his reply would go into the Record along with the financier's statement.

Flynn's proposals have won indorsement both of Republican and Democratic members. They planned to write them into the McSwain bill passed by the House, which contains many of Baruch's proposals for restricting war profits.

Meantime, the committee laid the groundwork for questioning Ben Smith, Wall Street operator, regarding transactions that brought control of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation into new hands on the eve of the naval building program launched by the Roosevelt Administration.

Witness Appears Solemn.

Several brokers were questioned during the day regarding the battle for the controlling stock while Smith, solemn-faced, sat on a spectators' bench, awaiting his call today to tell the part he played in acquiring control that was shared with the Cord Corporation.

The committee plan for wartime control and taxing of industry proposes to take all industrial profits above 3 per cent; all individual earnings above $10,000, and to make industrial leaders subject to Army discipline or duty in the trenches if they fail to cooperate.

Baruch asserted, however, that such drastic measures would result only in disruption of the industrial system.

"It is my deliberate and considered judgment," the financier said, "that the Flynn plan would insure an exaggerated inflation far greater than if there were no plan at all, paralyze war production and render this Nation practically helpless against a major attack by an enemy possessing an economic and industrial system fairly comparable with our own."

While conceding that it may be "decried" that "ours is an economy activated by profits," Baruch nevertheless warned against disruption of the industrial system "when the enemy is at the gates."

Declared Too Drastic.

"Plainly the result of the Flynn plan would be not merely to skim off the profits due to war," he said. "It is with insignificant exception, to abolish the present economic system in war. I am not debating here whether the profit-motive is right or wrong. I am only insisting that we recognize reality and what is here proposed."

He branded as "clearly in error" Flynn's suggestion that the Nation could pay all its war costs by taxing profits and could avoid inflation merely by taxation.

"You certainly can not pay the cost of war by taking war profits," Baruch said, "because profit is but a small part of war cost."

He attributed to Flynn "slanders" and "insinuations" against members of the War Industries Board and declared he would "stand on the record" to refute them.

Hearings Thursday On Marriage Clause

Restriction to Higher Pay Group May Come Up.

The House Civil Service Committee on Thursday will begin hearings on the Celler bill to repeal the married persons' clause which prohibits the employment of both man and wife in the established governmental departments.

Chairman Robert Ramspeck, (Democrat), Georgia, said that consideration may also be given to the proposal of Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia, that the ban be restricted to the higher salaried brackets.

"I feel the law has been administered to the detriment of the lower salaried classes," he said.

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, yesterday introduced a bill to make certain administrative adjustments in government departments where employes are required to work different numbers of hours a week.

The bill, which amends section 23 of the independent offices appropriations act of 1935, is aimed at offsetting a ruling by the Attorney General and will be particularly beneficial to workers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Senator O'Mahoney said.

Nice Delays His Approval Of New Bills

Plans to Confer With His Aids on Controversial Measures.

Expected to Veto Many of Proposals Passed by Assembly.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 15.—Instead of plunging into the task of signing bills passed by the recent session of the General Assembly today as he had originally expected, Gov. Harry W. Nice announced a change of plans whereby he will not tackle the job until the latter part of the week, signing the State police bill and "two or three other noncontroversial bills" Thursday or Friday. Indications are that he will not complete the work until some time next week.

The Governor said he desired to make a thorough study of many of the bills, and in the meantime to confer with Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, in addition to his several legislative advisers.

Approximately 550 measures are awaiting his consideration, and it is known that he plans to veto many of these.

Important Measures.

Among the more important enactments hanging in the balance are those requiring teachers in State-aided institutions to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and setting up an authority for the construction of a bridge across Chesapeake Bay, both of which have aroused a storm of protest. The Governor is said to oppose both of them.

Several belated hearings on bills were on the Governor's calendar for the day, special requests of proponents and opponents of the measures having been granted, following which the Governor left for Baltimore and conducted an inspection of the State motor vehicle department.

Ice Cream Bill Opposed.

Most important of the hearings was that on the ice cream bill which fixes a standard weight, rather than measure, for sale of the product. Opposition to the measure was based entirely on the claim that it would work a hardship on vendors about the streets and at amusement places, and the Governor was told that it would force many of them out of business.

The Governor indicated that he would approve the bill authorizing the mayor and council of Hyattsville to levy a tax of from 5 to 7 cents for the support of a public library in the town, after hearing a delegation in favor of it. A few days ago the Governor gave audience to a group in opposition to the bill. Today's delegation was headed by Delegate Egbert Tingley, member of the Prince Georges County delegation in the House, who sponsored the measure. The bill carries a referendum to the voters of the town, and this fact moved the Governor to announce that he would sign it.

Sellmayer Bears Council Standard

Democratic Nomination Is Given Meat Dealer.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 15.—The Democratic nomination for president of the Baltimore City Council was awarded to George Sellmayer, meat dealer, today amid bristling developments in the bitterly contested municipal primary race.

Hardly had an official recount been completed and Sellmayer declared the winner by 57 votes before backers of his opponent, Magistrate John A. Meyer, filed a petition alleging 137 instances of fraud and irregularities during the election.

They asked the recount be held open until the alleged irregularities had been investigated. Members of the election board, however, after conferring with Assistant Attorney General Charles T. Leviness, announced the petition was dismissed.

In the meantime, two official probes into election irregularities were started, one into evidences of ballot-box stuffing in South Baltimore and the other into "ghost voting" in the Fifteenth Ward.

Rippon Lodge One of Finest Of Colonial Homes on Parade

Present Owner Has Restored Virginia Manor to Eighteenth-Century Beauty; on Display to the Public Next Week.

By Elisabeth C. Taylor.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Rippon Lodge, one of the best-known old homes of Virginia through its connection with famous families of the country, will be only one of the historic places in the Alexandria district which may be seen during garden week, April 22-27, under auspices of the Garden Clubs of Virginia.

Built in the eighteenth century by Richard Blackburn, who came from the cathedral town of Rippon, England, in 1757, the mansion became the home of the Blackburn daughters.

The present owner, Wade H. Ellis, has restored the property to the glory and beauty of the days of the Blackburns. The interior has been restored and furniture and woodwork returned to its colonial magnificence when the home was the scene of brilliant weddings and receptions.

In some rooms as many as five coats of paint were removed before the lustre of the red pine showed. The interior, with its paneled doors, arches, elaborate mantels and solid oak floors, is a fitting place for the home of early Virginia patriots, one of whom is said to have planted a row of tea bushes in the garden in protest of the tea tax.

North on U. S. Route No. 1 one may branch off to Gunston Hall whose superb box garden is one of the sights which should not be missed. It was there that George Mason wrote the Virginia Bill of Rights. The house was built in 1758 by George Mason and remained in the family until the Civil War. Damage was done to the interior of the house by woodchoppers into whose hands it fell. It was rescued by an Army officer, Col. Edward Daniels, and sold to Joseph Specht, of St. Louis, who spent large sums in its restoration. The present owner, Louis Hertle, has restored box hedges, terraces and gardens.

Wellington, home of the tutor to the Custis children, Col. Tobias Lear, is on the Mount Vernon Memorial highway between Alexandria and Mount Vernon. The owners, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Matheson, have made a beautiful garden around the house, although no traces of the original garden remain.

An unusually attractive modern home and garden which will be open during Garden Week, not far from Wellington, the original land having been a part of the Wellington and Mount Vernon tract, is Ordleigh, home of Mr. and Mrs. William Ord.

Once in Alexandria there is no limit to historic homes and places which may be seen. Many of these are open during Garden Week and others will be opened for the pilgrimage to be conducted by the Garden Club of Alexandria on May 11. Gadsby's Tavern is, perhaps, the most interesting, although it is difficult to classify the various places. The tavern has been restored by the American Legion and is known to have been the gathering place for owners of many of the famous homes nearby.

180 Coal Firms Seek to Enjoin Rail Rate Rises

Preliminary Injunction Argument Scheduled for Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 15.—A preliminary injunction to restrain the Interstate Commerce Commission and railroads from putting into effect increased freight rates next Saturday was sought in the United States District Court here today by 180 coal mine operators in four States.

A hearing on the preliminary injunction is set for argument here Wednesday before a three-judge court, consisting of Circuit Judge Morris A. Soper, Baltimore; Judge W. Calvin Chesnut, Baltimore, and Judge Luther B. Way, of Norfolk.

The petition was filed by the Algoma Coal & Coke Co. against the Norfolk & Western Railway, the Virginian, Chesapeake & Ohio and other railroads.

It alleges that the commission acted arbitrarily when it authorized the roads to apply emergency surcharges to freight rates until June 30, 1936. It further alleges the shippers were given no opportunity to be heard on the question of surcharges and that no findings of the fact, on which the decision was rendered, were given.

J. Van Norman, chief attorney for the coal companies located in Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, said that for his clients alone the 15-cent-a-ton surcharge on coal would mean an added cost of $1,000,000 a month.

Teachers' Oath To Be Debated In Open Forum

Maryland Legislators Are Invited to Meeting in Baltimore Thursday.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., April 15.—Arranged by the Hopkins Chapter of the American League Against War and Fascism, an open forum on the teachers' oath bill will be held at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Thursday afternoon. Members of the Maryland House of Delegates and State Senators have been invited to present their opinions on the bill.

Forum letters mailed to members of the Legislature who voted for the bill state in part:

"Since it has been widely rumored that the teachers' oath bill was hastily and negligently passed by a weary Legislature, the Hopkins Chapter is arranging a public hearing to determine the present stand of those who favored passage of the bill.

"That the bill needs clarification as to the principle which prompted its introduction and as to its effect on the people of Maryland, is demonstrated by the diversity of opinion which guides its proponents and opponents.

"The Hopkins Chapter sees in the bill not the apparently innocuous matter of taking an oath of allegiance, but a very serious attack on democracy and the first step of a process which leads to Fascism and war."

The letter, signed by Harold Sampson, chairman of the Hopkins Chapter, states that members of the House of Delegates and each Senator will be given time to present his case and answer questions.

Peery Asks U.S. Aid For V. M. I. Cadets

Cars Needed to Take Corps to Fredericksburg.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 15.—Gov. Peery today lamented the fact that his contingent fund was too meager to finance the movement of V. M. I. cadets from Lexington to Fredericksburg, where they have been invited to participate in the Chancellorsville celebration, May 2, but searched in other directions for aid.

Through Adjt. Gen. S. G. Waller, the chief executive asked permission of the corps area headquarters to use United States Army trucks in movement of the cadets.

The Governor said he would do everything possible, within the law, to make the Chancellorsville celebration a success, and that he regretted that no contingent fund was available large enough to permit his office to co-operate directly with the Fredericksburg committee.

Jury to Open Well-Slaying Quiz Today

Indictment of Pair in Coleman Case Will Be Sought.

Two Colored Men Are Included in Panel in Spotsylvania.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 15.—A special grand jury including two colored men will convene at Spotsylvania courthouse tomorrow to consider indictments against John Shell and Joe Jackson, colored, charged with the "well slaying" of Mr. and Mrs. John Thomas Coleman on their farm near here April 2.

Two lengthy indictments were prepared today by Commonwealth's Attorney Emmett R. Carner, each detailing circumstances of the crime and naming Shell and Jackson.

About a dozen witnesses from Spotsylvania County and Richmond have been summoned.

Jackson Guarded in Jail.

Members of the special grand jury are John M. Chilton, J. T. Owens, R. B. Burruss, G. B. Gardner, with Virgil Williams and Alexander Crump, the last two being colored.

Jackson is held in the local jail under special guard. He surrendered more than a week ago. Shell was arrested in Haverstraw, N. Y., Friday night. Spotsylvania officers would not say today whether they would take Jackson to Spotsylvania for the grand jury session.

Shell refused to return to Virginia and if he is indicted tomorrow, extradition papers will be sent Gov. Peery, who will send them to Gov. Lehman, of New York.

Exhibits Include Watch Case.

Among exhibits to be presented are the gold watch case of Mr. Coleman and 6 inches of gun barrel found by Sheriff M. L. Blaydes in Shell's possession when arrested in New York. Officers say the small length of gun barrel may be a piece of the Coleman shotgun believed used in the killing of the aged couple.

All day yesterday curious visitors poured into the Coleman homestead to view the farm on which the couple were killed on the night of April 2 and their bodies thrown into a deep well.

Halifax Deputy Received Tip Leading to Arrest

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., April 15.—H. G. Sibley, a deputy sheriff of Halifax County, obtained the tip which resulted in the arrest in Haverstraw, N. Y., of John Shell, colored, a suspect in the murder of Mr. and Mrs. John Coleman in Spotsylvania County.

Sibley was informed that Shell had been connected with a cattle-stealing venture years ago and obtained an address in Mamaroneck where he might be found. Sibley accompanied Virginia officers there and picked up a trail which led to Shell's capture.

Shell had been convicted in Pittsylvania County and, according to the police here, has a long criminal record.

Threat Sent Negro, Grand Jury Member

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., April 15.—The first Rockingham Circuit Court grand jury with a Negro member today returned eight indictments, but failed to return true bills in four other cases.

J. Ed. Black, Harrisonburg Negro auto mechanic, and overseas veteran, was the first of his race to sit on the grand jury. He reported for duty in spite of a threatening letter signed K. K. K. and mailed to him from Waynesboro, which read:

"A hint to the wise is sufficient. Just a tip, if you believe in signs you will not be present for the grand jury. (Signed) K. K. K.

Officials will turn the letter over to Federal agents. It was written on a piece of wrapping paper. No concern was felt over it and Black handed the letter to Sheriff Charles R. Fawley when he received it.

Black has been on the grand jury list for a year, but this was the first time he was called. Judge H. W. Bertram ordered Negroes placed on the jury list after the Scottsboro decision.

Health Rate Takes Drop In Maryland

Report Shows 7,064 Cases of Infectious Disease So Far This Year.

Influenza, Tuberculosis and Pneumonia Lead in Increase.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 15.—Dr. Robert H. Riley, State director of health, said today there were 7,064 cases of infectious diseases reported in Maryland in the first three months of the year.

This is an increase of 463 cases over the same quarter of 1934, he said, despite improvement in a number of diseases. The increase was largely attributed to a mild epidemic of influenza that swept the State.

Tuberculosis and pneumonia showed small increases. There were 2,114 cases of influenza this year, compared with 297 in the first three months of last year, an increase of 1,817 cases. Tuberculosis rose 23 cases to a total of 321, and pneumonia jumped from 805 last year to 921 this year, an increase of 116.

On the other hand, Dr. Riley said, typhoid fever dropped four cases to a total of 26, and diphtheria dropped 30 cases to a total of 71 for the first quarter of this year. Measles cases reported were 775, a decrease of 944 from the 1,719 in the same period last year. Whooping cough decreased in prevalence by 286 cases to a total of 185 in the same period.

"We are particularly pleased with the reduction in the number of typhoid fever and diphtheria cases," Dr. Riley said. "The increase in the total diseases is to be found in the reports of influenza, tuberculosis and pneumonia, the latter of all forms."

Claimants Look To Woman, 106, In Will Fight

She May Aid Shenandoah Families in Battle for Garrett Millions.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., April 15.—A 106-year-old Highland County woman—Mrs. Ellen McCrea—may give information which will give the $17,000,000 Garrett snuff fortune to members of the Good and Schaffer families of the Shenandoah Valley.

Attorney Lynn Lucas, of Luray, yesterday told an assembly of members of the Good and Schaffer families at Stokesville near here that he believed Mrs. McCrea might have helpful information. He pointed out, however, that there already are several thousand claimants for the millions.

The information sought from Mrs. McCrea is whether Christopher Schaffer, the father of Mrs. Henrietta Garrett who willed the estate to her "relatives," is the same Christopher Schaffer, who was born near Bridgewater and left home at an early age. Mrs. McCrea is said to have received a letter from Schaffer after he arrived in Philadelphia. The sister of this Christopher Schaffer, Mrs. Elizabeth Schaffer Good, is buried at Bridgewater.

Attorneys have been unable to locate definitely relatives of Mrs. Garrett since her death in 1930. It is said that the relatives of William Garrett are seeking to claim the fortune. They have spent considerable money in attempting to prove their claims, having gone so far as to dig up a section of Maryland road to uncover an ancient burial ground.

Mlle. Veverka Third Foreigner To Rule as Queen Shenandoah

Selection of Envoy's Daughter for Honor at Blossom Festival Looked Upon as Gesture to Czechoslovakia.

By C. B. Carr.

Post State Editor.

Winchester, Va., April 15.—When Mlle. Nella Veverka, charming 19-year-old blonde daughter of the Czechoslovakian Minister to the United States, reigns over the twelfth Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival here the first week in May, it will be the third time that a person of foreign nationality has ascended the throne. She will be the second queen chosen from diplomatic circles of Washington.

Although it was not stated in the announcement, selection of the young blonde Slav as Queen Shenandoah was generally regarded here today as a favorable trade gesture toward the Czechs which have only recently completed a commercial treaty with the United States under terms of which growers of this apple belt expect to ship thousands of barrels of apples to the Danubian republic next season.

Mlle. Veverka was extended the invitation to be queen by a committee of the festival headed by Mrs. B. B. Dutton, veteran chairman of the queen's court committee. She graciously accepted the invitation and told fete authorities that her brother, Ferdinand Veverka, would be her official escort during the two-day fete.

Seven years ago, Dr. Veverka was named Czechoslovakian minister to the United States and since that time Mlle. Veverka has resided with her parents in Washington. Since being in Washington, Mlle. Veverka has been privately tutored and last season made her debut in Washington society.

The court of Queen Shenandoah XII will be composed of two maids of honor, train bearers, crown bearers and 33 princesses from colleges of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia. She will be crowned the afternoon of May 2, the first day of the festival on which occasion a royal ritual of ancient Europe will be used. The ritual is being translated into English by the Rev. Dr. S. L. Flickinger, Winchester liturgist.

A detail of cadets from Massanutten Academy, Woodstock, Va., will form the queen's escort at the coronation and royal anthems will be sung by the glee club of State Teachers College, Harrisonburg, Va. During remainder of the festival, members of the band of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Blacksburg, will form the royal escort.

The Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival annually celebrates the blossoming of 11,000,000 apple trees in the Shenandoah-Potomac-Cumberland commercial belt of Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. It usually attracts 150,000 people to Winchester.

Good morning! Jayson Shirts this Easter! There were none last Easter, and you had to wear a starched collar to look as neat. Even then, the collar was likely to crush or wilt. The Jayson Shirt has a collar with all of the trim neatness of a starched collar, but with no starch.

J. H. Allender Named School Board Official

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., April 15.—J. H. Allender, member of the Carroll County board of education, was appointed temporary acting secretary and treasurer today to fill the vacancy caused by the death of M. S. H. Unger, who also was superintendent.

According to Harry R. DeVries, president of the board, a superintendent probably will not be appointed for several months. The board has the right to appoint a superintendent with the approval of the State superintendent and State board of education.

Session Call May Oust 2 Virginia Aids

Justice Eggleston and Attorney General Staples Face Loss.

Special Assembly Asked on Hopkins Request on Relief Fund.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Norfolk, Va., April 15.—Attorney General A. P. Staples and Supreme Court Justice J. W. Eggleston will lose their appointment if the General Assembly is called in extra session to consider the demand of Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins that Virginia furnish $5,000,000 for relief.

Gov. Peery is much concerned over the situation created by the Hopkins ultimatum. Local members of the bar and the local political fraternity are disturbed over the prospect that Norfolk would lose the only member of the supreme court this city has had. Both Justice Eggleston and Staples are former members of the State Senate. The terms for which they were elected do not expire until next January 1. The constitution bars them from confirmation if a session of the Assembly is called before that time.

Others May Lose.

Two other members of the State administration family are also in jeopardy under the circumstances. They are Wilbur C. Hall, newly appointed chairman of the State commission on conservation and development, and John Q. Rhodes, motor vehicle director. Both served in the last House of Delegates, in a term which does not expire until the end of this year. The attorney general and Supreme Court justices, however, are elected by the General Assembly, while the other officials simply are confirmed by the Assembly after appointment by the Governor. It is possible, although not entirely certain, that Hall and Rhodes may escape the difficulty of a special session.

Favored for Jobs.

Justice Eggleston received indorsement from all sections of Virginia when his appointment by the Governor to fill a vacancy on the court was pending recently. Staples' service as attorney general on appointment to fill the vacancy created by the death of Col. John R. Saunders also has been subject of generally favorable comment throughout the State.

However, in Staples' home city, Roanoke, an antiadministration faction of considerable strength has been built up as result of a bitter fight over the Roanoke judgeship. This faction is exerting itself to bring pressure on the Governor to call a special session in belief that would eliminate Staples from his State post.

Another Permanent "Personality Act" Is Engaged to Succeed Granoff at Earle

Radio Vocalists To Be Heard in Debut Friday

Cook and His Little Words; A Concert Innovation; About Showshops.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

Having struck a responsive chord in popular fancy with the year-long engagement of Bert Granoff, tenor, as a featured adjunct of the Earle Theater Orchestra, under the conductorship of C. Frederick Clark—an engagement which came to an end last Thursday night—John J. Payette, general manager of the Warner Brothers interests in the Washington territory, has been quietly looking about for an adequate successor among "personality" acts to perpetuate the Earle's reputation for the discovery of distinctive talent, represented by such local favorites as Maxine Doyle, Gracie Barrie, Granoff and Audrey Sieber.

So, beginning next Friday, there will be a new act to make its bid for permanent favor in the estimation of Thirteenth street audiences. On that day, which would be April 19, Fred Cook and His Three Little Words will take up the task of carrying on from the point where, in rotation, Maxine, Gracie, Bert and Audrey have, in a manner of speaking, stopped—although Gracie Barrie, now in the second of at least three weeks on the Earle stage, and Audrey Sieber, in her severalth year of mistressing of ceremonies, have not stopped at all, and, a kind Providence—not Rhode Island's—permitting, will not for many theatrical years to come.

Are Close Harmonists.

The "Three Little Words," so-called, are three girls whose voices—like the Pickens Sisters', the Three X Sisters' and a few others that might be named—blend in perfect harmony. Fred Cook is a pianist, composer and arranger.

Cook was broadcasting with his orchestra from Station KOMA—which seemed to throw its listeners into anything but that—in Oklahoma City, Okla., when he met two of the girls, Joan Jarrett and Beth Raborn. Frances Joy, who completes the trio, was born in Shreveport, La., and began her radio career in that city. Then she visited the station in Oklahoma City, and you can piece the rest of the case history together for yourself. Result, "The Three Little Words."

Then along came a showman. Or maybe he was only a scout for some other showman. At any rate, Bob Kerr, agent, en route from Hollywood to New York—a village on the Hudson with delusions of theatrical grandeur—stopped off in Oklahoma, for no obvious reason, heard the girls, hastened on East and approached important functionaries of the amusement world with high hopes and extravagant verbiage.

Stopped Off in Capital.

On his way to the ostensible capital of show business, Mr. Kerr stumbled into WJSV in Washington—the radio station that sends this column's imperishable words thundering down the centuries of audible air waves every Wednesday at 1:30 p. m.—and the office of Lee Everett, program director. So Fred Cook and his Three Little Words went on once, were heard and grabbed by the alert and astute Mr. Payette. And there you have it, or them, as the case may be.

Another result of the initial broadcast is that the entire Columbia network will carry their songs for 15 minutes, starting at 12:45 today.

The Three Little Words—and that is one of the craziest names for an act these dimming eyes ever have encountered—are sufficiently proficient to have induced Mr. Cook to abandon his Oklahoma band and devote his entire time and skill to the promotion of their best interests, songs, arrangements, etc. The combination is expected to stop the show, come Friday.

We shall be there in a front mezzanine pew to determine whether or not these optimistic expectations are realized.

For those who may have shared this department's curiosity concerning the origin of Count Berni Vici, the splendid violinist who heads the "Spices of 1935" revue, on the stage of Loew's Fox this week, may we say then that on his own word the count is an Hungarian and a native of Budapest.

He has had a unique experience in the theater. Wherever he goes and in whatever country he presents one of his revues, he recruits its personnel from the native artists of the land in which he is appearing. He has played practically around the globe, with the exception of the Oriental countries.

Thus, we find him now, with agents already in the Far East arranging details for the furtherance of his present tour. His current trouping extends to Hollywood and the West Coast. Then he goes on to Hawaii, the Philippines, Japan, China and such other of the Oriental countries as he has not heretofore visited.

The present cast of 40, appearing at the Fox, has been intact and with him since last September.

And what a girl that Isabel Dawn is! But more of her later. There is a good deal of her already!

An Artiste's Innovation.

Mme. Marie von Unschuld, formerly pianiste to Her Majesty the late Queen Elizabeth of Roumania, and the holder of perhaps more decorations and distinguished citations than any other Washington artiste, whose photographic likeness appears on this page, just now is lending her brilliant interpretative talents to the development of a new form of artistic enterprise that is eliciting the unanimous attention and interest of all the leading educators of the East.

Introduces Unique Musical Innovation

Mme. Marie von Unschuld, brilliant Washington concert pianiste, as she recently appeared in a mechanically accompanied recital that has attracted wide attention among the country's educators. Appearing early this month at the Washington Missionary College, Takoma Park, and later at Teachers College of Columbia University, in New York, Mme. von Unschuld, with the aid of a self-controlled radio-phonograph combination of Stromberg-Carlson, created the illusion of a joint recital between a concert pianiste of international renown and a full symphony orchestra, as tonally perfect as if it had been with her on the stage. This is a utilization of recorded music that embodies vast potentialities.

On April 1, Mme. von Unschuld presented a recital at the Washington Missionary College, in Takoma Park, and a week later at the Teachers College of Columbia University, in New York. The unique feature of these recitals—and there are many more in prospect at leading institutions of higher learning—has been that Mme. von Unschuld has rendered the solo piano passages of some of the world's greatest compositions for the pianoforte, accompanied by a perfected radio-phonograph combination by Stromberg-Carlson, that permits her to "conduct" her own symphonic accompaniment.

Unique Effect Results.

The result uniformly has been a program as perfectly executed as if the accompanying symphony actually had been on the stage with the solo artiste.

Among the numbers which Mme. von Unschuld has interpreted by this novel means have been Beethoven's poetic andante and joyous rondo of the G major Concerto and the Liszt Concerto in E flat major.

These standard works were executed with all the fine musical shadings, warmth of feeling and clearness of technique expected of the acknowledge artiste. The Liszt concerto was done with such breath-taking solo brilliancy and such magnificent orchestral support that one had only to close his eyes to be sure that a full symphony was on stage.

Mme. von Unschuld has the unqualified support of several of the ranking officials of the U. S. Bureau of Education, who perceive in her new departure in solo artistry an unlimited field for musical and cultural development.

"The Road to Life," the Russian film counterpart of our own production of "Wild Boys of the Road"—in which one of the wildest of the boys was a girl!—is attracting such favorable attention at the Belasco Theater this week that it will be continued through Friday, instead of surrendering to a new attraction on Thursday.

On Saturday, April 20, George Arliss will succeed to the stellar position on the Belasco screen in "The Iron Duke," in which he assumes the role of the distinguished Lord Wellington, who turned Napoleon back at Waterloo.

Producer Seeks Star.

Guthrie McClintic, the American theatrical manager and producer and in private life the husband of Katharine Cornell, will arrive in England on Thursday, April 18, on the S. S. Majestic to see John Gielgud's production of "Hamlet" and to discuss with him a project for the presentation of the tragedy in New York City next winter.

Last summer Mr. McClintic talked with Mr. Gielgud about an American season, but the player's plans did not permit his going to New York at the time.

While in England Mr. McClintic also will interview other important English players, with a view to their joining Miss Cornell's company in America next fall, when she will make a tour in "Romeo and Juliet," which she acted in New York this winter.

Later, Miss Cornell will make her first appearance in Ibsen in "Rosmersholm," under Mr. McClintic's direction. At present she is playing in John van Druten's "Flowers of the Forest" in New York City.

Speaking of "Flowers of the Forest," as somebody assuredly was, it is comforting to note that a week later, Percy Hammond, of the New York Herald-Tribune, yesterday reiterated in thought and intent precisely what this journal said in its theater lead space a week ago. Mr. Hammond has an uncanny sense of word value. We make no such boast. We are pleased, however, that one of Mr. Hammond's acumen and our humble selves should have seen and interpreted so nearly eye-to-eye and mind-to-mind an interesting, if not perfect play. Brooks Atkinson, on the New York Times, is a little more drastic. He insists that Author van Druten has fumbled the opportunity to solve the whole imponderable subject of war. What playwright ever has done otherwise?. Mr. van Druten has not written a great play in "Flowers of the Forest," but he has written one that deserves something more than the thoughtfully pugnacious Mr. Atkinson accedes it.

Dots and Dashes.

Let's see, now, about that Isabel Dawn, in Count Berni Vici's "Spices of 1935" revue, on the stage of Loew's Fox . . . She is quite a gal . . . Bob Carney ought to know, the way she slams him around . . . The Count declares that she weighs somewhere between 160 and 170 . . . And she is a second Evelyn Law . . . Mister, that is an achievement. . . . When a girl like that can dance like that . . . Well, you write your own ticket . . . Mine is already written! . . . That "Girl in the Goldfish Bowl" novelty in the lobby at the Fox this week has been slightly modified, so I am told, since opening day . . . District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, it seems, strolled by and took a peek . . . The gal now is wearing a bath suit . . . Probably a Jantzen . . . But you should have seen her before! . . . "A Doll's House," one of the oftenest produced of the plays of the tragic Henrik Ibsen, will be the third and final production of the current season of the Studio of Theater Arts . . . That would be at Wardman Park Theater on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 23 and 24 . . . A competent group of local performers will enact the long list of famous characters in this grim play . . . "Come and bring the kiddies" is the classic crack about this one! . . . Official Washington will have an opportunity to pass judgment on one of the lesser publicized accomplishments of emergency relief, tomorrow night, when a presentation of Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" will be presented in the National Press Club Auditorium . . . A performance of this classic of the drama division of the Temporary Emergency Relief Administration of New York City will be given in cooperation with "Happy Days," the weekly publication of the CCC.

Smoker Coming Up.

The Variety Club will hold its first smoker in several weeks tonight in the clubrooms in the Hotel Willard . . . The annual golf tournament and dinner dance of the Variety Club, incidentally, will be held at the Manor Club, Friday, May 10 . . . The announcement comes from that high-strung Southern gentleman, Sam Galanty . . . About 80 are expected to participate in the tournament and from 200 to 250 are expected to be present for the evening rout . . . That's a lot of pipple . . . But not so many as the seeming millions who attended the club's first riot at the Willard! . . . Boy, what a night, morning, afternoon and next night! . . . If you know what I mean . . . On April 26 and 27, the Montgomery Players will present for their final production of the season, "Counsellor-at-Law," by Elmer Rice . . . This is the thing Paul Muni did on the stage and Jack Barrymore—aren't we intimate?—did on the stage . . . All to credit of the former . . . So comes a cordial note from Hugh Herbert from the Benjamin Franklin Hotel in Philadelphia . . . "I've just read the article on the party, written by you"—that would have been last Friday—"and all I can say is, will you marry me?" . . . That's a swell offer, but what to do with Rose Epstein, who has been Mrs. Hugh Herbert these past 20 years? . . . Or is it only 10? . . . So the answer is "No," Hugh . . . Anyhow, this is so sudden! . . . That model home, garden and whatnot horticultural display in the lobby of Loew's Fox is being continued another week . . . On account of because of its public popularity . . . The gal in that goldfish bowl comes out Thursday night . . . Don't say I didn't warn you . . . "Rope's End," by Patrick Hamilton, is announced by the Columbia Players as the fifth production of their season . . . A new group of young Washington players will make their debut here next week . . . Rebecca Tarwater and other associates of the King Smith Studio School will be assisted by three popular Washington actors . . . They will present Strindberg's "Easter," Good Friday in Wardman Park . . . Caroline McKinley is directing . . . "R. U. R.," the fantastic melodrama of the future, by Karel Capek, will be produced by the Cue and Curtain Club of George Washington University early in May . . . It will be directed by Harold A. Weinberger . . . Mr. Weinberger would be of the local Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer forces, functioning under the managerial direction of Rudolph Berger.

Daphne Comes Out.

"Daphne's Debut," which sounds interesting, will be given in the ballroom of the Mayflower on April 23 and 24 . . . A benefit for the Civic Betterment Fund . . . Written and composed by Mrs. Arthur William Radford . . . "The Road to Life," the Belasco's current screen attraction, was sponsored by Mme. Krupskaya . . . That is to say, she brought about the juvenile salvation of Soviet Russia and provided the groundwork of the story . . . Mme. Krupskaya will broadcast for the first time to America from Moscow on May 3 . . . International hookup over N. B. C. . . . The occasion, a twentieth anniversary observation in honor of Jane Addams and the Women's International League for Peace . . . Helen Hayes, Washington stage star, and Eva Le Gallienne, recently here in Clemence Dane's revised version of Rostand's "L'Aiglon," are members of the honorary committee . . . Gene Lockhart wires from Hollywood that he will present a summer revue on the West Coast, tentatively entitled—the revue, not the West Coast—"Close-ups," similar to his "How's Your Code?" produced in Westport two summers ago . . . Lockhart is a featured RKO-Radio player, currently appearing in "Star of Midnight," with Ginger Rogers and Bill Powell at RKO-Keith's . . . Sorry there is no news this morning . . . Better luck next time in rounding up an item!

Jack Alicoate, formerly a minion of this estimable family journal, has sent out his annual call for the Third Annual Motion Picture Forum of the Critics of America. The questionnaire is enough to knock your eye out!

All-For-Uplift Note.

So here goes for putting the industry on its feet, or somewhere even a little less encouraging.

Pierce Hall

FRANCIS SHINN'S MARIONETTES. The Women's International League presents the second of three children's entertainments. At Pierce Hall. Reviewed Saturday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

The Program.
1. Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum.
2. The Magician.
3. "Rumpelstiltzkin."

A puppet version of the familiar nursery tale of Rumpelstilzkin and his ability to spin straw into gold thread featured the second children's entertainment presented by the Women's International League, local sponsors for the Children's Theater of New York, which brings "Aladdin" to the National Theater next Saturday as its final offering.

Francis Shinn was the puppeteer whose creations—in word and act—were paraded on Saturday, and an enjoyable parade it was. The program was opened with a non-Carroll episode in the joint career of Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum. Second presentation was that of a magician whose tricks were performed with convincing realism.

Done in seven scenes, the story of the gnome, Rumpelstilzkin, was charmingly presented in soliloqual dialogue rhymed in couplets.

The entire program—to which an encore of acrobats was added—was colorfully presented.

Maryland Grocers To Fight Sales Tax

Association Formed and Meeting Is Called.

By the Associated Press.

Easton, Md., April 15.—Up in arms against the gross receipts tax which went into effect April 1, retail grocers of this section are aligning themselves with a State association attempting to do away with the new levy.

Each has received a letter urging him to close up his store at least one day and attend a protest meeting of the association to be held in Cumberland May 12 and 13. Referring to the unsuccessful fight against passage of the tax act by the Legislature, the letter says:

"The first battle may be lost, but it is time to win another if you all get on the firing line. You have been sacrificed on the altar of beer and the public utilities and you will have to fight your way out."

The statement referred to the action of the Legislature in sidetracking proposed levies on beer and public utilities in favor of the 1 per cent gross sales tax as a means of raising the State's share of relief money.

THE presidential pitching arm of Franklin D. Roosevelt conditioned by 12 months' rest and dusted off for the occasion, will rise and fall to the click of camera shutters along about 3 o'clock at Griffith Stadium this afternoon, and the big league baseball season will be launched—almost.

After the President flings a shiny new baseball in the general direction of a group of eager, grasping Washington players who will want it as a memento, Umpire in Chief Geisel will interrupt the dignity of the occasion with what the radio announcers will say is a shout of "Play Ball!"

Actually, Umpire Geisel will mumble a gruff "Get Going," or an impatient "Let's Go," and the Nats will take the field against the Philadelphia Athletics with 25,000 pairs of eyes focused on the opening wind-up of Pitcher Earl Whitehill.

Weather Cloudy, Cool.

The weather man has promised to play ball with the city's fandom with the prediction that the day will be only partly cloudy, although the temperature will drop. Twenty thousand reservations already have been taken up with the sale of 5,000 rush seats in the bleachers foreseen.

In seven different major league cities, 16 ball teams will launch their pennant campaigns in both big leagues this afternoon, but graced by the presidential presence and the group and ceremony that only the Capital's officialdom commands, Washington will be the focal point of the Nation's baseball interest today.

Following the strains of "Hail to the Chief," rendered by the Army Band as the Chief Executive rolls into the ball park in his White House car and takes his seat with his official party in a box abaft the Washington dugout, Vice President John Nance Garner will head the players' parade to the flagpole for the annual flag-raising ceremonies.

If precedent is followed, Congress will engineer an early adjournment and the legislators will take their place with high Government officials, diplomats and other dignitaries in the boxes for the annual assault on the hot dogs and peanuts.

Directing the Nats from the dugout will be Bucky Harris, original boy manager of the Washington club, who has returned this year to the scene of his former triumphs. Leader of the first Washington team that ever won a pennant, Harris returns to the Capital as the manager of a seventh-place club bequeathed him by Joe Cronin, whose own departure to Boston further weakened the Nats.

Opposed to Harris in the enemy dugout will be the venerable Connie Mack, entering his seventy-fourth year, his fiftieth in baseball. Manager Mack has declined to name the pitcher who will oppose Whitehill, but it is known that he inclines to Johnny Marcum and Johnny Cain, both right handers, with Marcum as the probable choice.

When the Athletics take the field, Washington fans will be the first to gaze upon Jimmy Foxx, the team's famed slugger, in a regular catching role. Seeking to bolster his backstopping strength as well as his club's hitting power, Mack is attempting to convert his star first baseman into a catcher, a position he played in his early big league days.

Two New Faces.

The Washington team that takes the field will number two faces new to Capital fans. At shortstop, the clever-fielding Lyn Lary, obtained from the Red Sox in the Cronin deal, has won the job and eighth place in the batting order.

In center field, Washington fans will be gazing upon a local boy who has, apparently, made good. In Jake Powell, product of the Washington sandlots, Harris hopes to find both added hitting power and better defensive strength for his club. The fleet Powell, a .361 batter in

From Right to Left: As Nats Will Go to Bat in 1935 Pennant Race

With Shirley Povich

IN accordance with an old reportorial custom on the eve of the pennant race, this department yesterday asked Bucky Harris for a statement. His reply typified the man. "Tell 'em," he said, "that we'll have no excuses if we don't win the pennant."

Thus Harris disdained all of the handy alibis at his command if the Nats fail to win the pennant. The ball club that he inherited from Joe Cronin last fall was a seventh-place outfit which finished 34 games behind the leader. It was further weakened at the end of the season by Joe Cronin's departure to the Nouveau Riche Boston Red Sox. At the present writing, his team is almost a unanimous second-division choice.

POVICH.

In the face of it all, Harris almost makes you believe his new charges can win the pennant. He was saying yesterday that he didn't think that it was a tough league and that five clubs could win the pennant with Washington among 'em. He appeared no more depressed at the immediate outlook than the newly informed winner of an Irish sweepstakes.

And this Harris is a grim, starg realist. Fifteen years in the big leagues, tasting the bitter with the sweet, have tempered his emotions. He talks not as if the wish were father to the hough, but with the authority born of experience and nurued on practicability. To hear him tell it, his ball club is the team to beat in the pennant race.

At that, it is difficult to see eye to eye with Harris. The team has a pitching problem that is as yet unanswered. It is going into the pennant race with the youngest and most inexperienced catching staff ever brought to the major leagues in one season. In center field a rookie is getting another big league tryout after his first failure. At shortstop the club is taking a 60-point setback in batting compared o last season.

On the bright side of the picture is the prospect that the team can bring to bear no less than seven .300 hitters to support its pitching weakness. Lyn Lary is a defensive shortstop superior even to Cronin, and in center field Alvin Powell boasts the same advantage over Fred Schulte. On the mound there are indications of added strength in the presence of Bump Badley, Ed Linke and Henry Coppola.

The pitching unquestionably holds the fate of the Nats. Of the veterans, only Earl Whitehill and Bob Burke appear as assets. Monte Weaver and Walter Stewart are now recognised as confirmed in-and-outers and Harris needs pitching help. He must get it from Hadley, Linke and Coppola.

But it is at mention of the last-named trio that Harris enthuses. Hadley he has always regarded with admiration since he curbed his wildness with the St. Louis Browns three years ago. Linke he regards as the pitcher most likely to supplant Weaver or Stewart in a regular role. In his praise of Coppola, Harris admits he sounds brash, but he is staking his judgment on the ability of the young Italian right-hander to earn a regular turn.

Harris is playing the percentages, too. On the well-established theory that three-fourths of the league's pitchers are right-handers, Harris is presenting a solid front of six consecutive southpaw hitters, who are supposed to have an advantage against right-handed pitching.

A contributing factor to Harris' optimism is his possession of capable reserve strength, an item which he always lacked at Detroit and Boston. And the Nats doubtless are better fortified in infield and outfield reserves than any club in the league. In Ossie Bluege, Harris owns the most talented utility man in baseball. And if it is hitting that he needs in an infield berth, Red Kress and his lifetime .300 average will answer the call.

Even should Jake Powell be a keen disappointment in center field, the orders of the office could be draped becomingly over the shoulders of Fred Schulte, who in eight years in the big leagues has never had a serious rival for a center field job. With a lifetime batting average of .299 and an outfielding range exceeded only by three or four in the big leagues, Schulte's presence in center field would be no drawback to the Nats.

Harris apparently is content to stand on his catching, which is considered a gamble in other league quarters. Cliff Bolton, a regular after five years' apprenticeship, still retains the rough edges of his minor league play, but his batting average covers a multitude of defensive sins. His catching, however, is the one department in which Harris boasts no tried reserves. Sammy Holbrook, the No. 2 catcher, is less than a year in organized baseball, which is the tip-off.

Reds Turn Back Johnny Mize To Cards

Announcement Made After Report Leg Operation Is Necessary.

By the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, April 15.—Cincinnati's Reds decided today not to gamble $55,000 on Rookie Johnny Mize.

Though Manager Charlie Dressen has called the youngster "the greatest rookie first baseman I have ever seen," they turned him back to the St. Louis Cardinals because of an injury he suffered while playing with Rochester last year.

"All of the specialists who examined the player agreed that an operation undoubtedly was necessary to remove the growth from his side," General Manager Larry MacPhail explained, adding it "would prevent Mize from playing for us this season." Thus, he concluded, "there was nothing we could do under the agreement except to return the player."

Option Expires.

An option on the youngster expired today.

The decision cut down the "kid infield" Dressen has been building up, but it assured Jim Bottomley of his job at first.

Even with Mize gone, though, the team taking the field against the Pittsburgh Pirates in tomorrow's opening game will have five rookies or near-rookies on it.

MacPhail wound up deals bringing Lew Riggs from Columbus, and Ival Goodman from Rochester, for $20,000 apiece, and slated Riggs for third base and Goodman for right field in tomorrow's game. The others are Myers, Byrd and Kampouris.

American Association To Draw 40,000 Today

Chicago, April 15 (AP).—The same old American Association, with a few changes here and there, joins baseball's opening parade tomorrow for the thirty-fourth time.

The same eight clubs that shoved off in 1902 will open their parks for what the club owners are certain will be a big success from every angle. If the weather behaves, a total of around 40,000 is expected. Columbus, the 1934 champion, is all set for a crowd of 15,000 in spite of the prediction of near-freezing weather.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 15.—Baseball's opening day tomorrow! Snow tonight in some parts of the West but Press Agent Bill Brandt, of the National League, calls it "evanescent." Our guess is that half the games won't be played and Dolph Luque's familiar crack—"wear your overcoats to Boston, amigos—will be timely . . . Cincinnati ball park was sold out March 15 and today four box seats showed up in the window of an Over-the Rhine pawn shop . . .

Casey Stengel, Charley Grimm and Frank Frisch on a Coast-to-Coast hook up tonight had a buck fever . . . Mickey Cochrane, Joe Cronin and Joe McCarthy had that old certain "something" . . . They'll be plugging eyebrow pencils and dynamiting yeast cakes yet . . . Just talked to Secretary Ed Cuningham of the Braves: "We've sold 15,000 reserved seats and if the weather stays like it is now (warm and cloudy) we'll have 40,000 out to see that big guy Ruth tomorrow."

"It looks," he said, "like a record opening day for our stockholders." President Ford Frick, of the National League, is scheduled to fly to Boston tomorrow morning . . . Former President John Heydler goes to Philly to see Brooklyn's dashing Dodgers . . .

All National League managers will tell you frankly they never had a chance to bid for Pitcher Pat Malone, of the Cards . . . It was handled through the front offices, which lends credence to the old bellow of "Syndicate ball . . ." Yanks and Giants have cut out invitation passes again this year and both the Yankee Stadium and the Polo Grounds will have a leprosy of empty seats at their inaugurals.

Tony Lazzeri will sing in the chorus if outdoor opera plans for Yankee Stadium go through for this summer . . . A Nation-wide Notre Dame night will be held April 29 . . . Harry Stuldreher, of Villanova, will head the delegation at Baltusrol (N. J.) Country Club with Yale, Princeton and Harvard coaches represented . . Gov. Harold Hoffman will also tap a keg.

Ross Gives Up Lightweight Ring Title

Resigns in Surprise Move; Bout With McLarnin Due May 28.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 15.—Barney Ross, the little fellow who has ruled the lightweights for the last two years, decided he was too big for them today, and so he turned in his resignation as champion of the 135-pounders to the New York State Aethletic Commission.

This sudden move, first of its kind in lightweight title history that goes all the way back to 1868, when Abe Hicken beat Pete McGuire in Perrysville, Mo., brought several swift developments.

First, it relieved the dapper little Chicago walloper of the necessity of fighting Lou Ambers, a tough, rubber-ball sort of warrior, who has been pestering him for a chance at the lightweight crown for months, and who is designated as the No. 1 title challenger here.

McLarnin Bout Arranged.

It paved the way for another really "big money" battle between Ross and Jimmy McLarnin, the welterweight king, whom Barney outpointed last May to become a double champion, and then bowed to in a return engagement in September. Mike Jacobs, promoter of the newly formed Twentieth Century Sporting Club, has their rubber duel all arranged and will ask the boxing commission tomorrow for permission to stage it May 28 in the Polo Grounds.

This left the way open for Ross, one of the brighter of the leather slingers, to discover after he has fought McLarnin again that by superhuman methods he can get down to the class limit of 135 pounds.

Finally, it brought forth a thundering herd of aspiring lightweights. Pending serious consideration of the situation at tomorrow's meeting of the commission, when outdoor dates will be awarded, Brig. Gen. John J. Phelan, chairman of the commission, said a

Tigers to Win 100 Games—Cochrane

Rowe and Bridges Are Due to Take 45, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, April 15.—Manager Mickey Cochrane took stock of his club tonight and predicted the Tigers would win 100 games this season.

Mickey listed the game-winning potentialities of his pitchers as follows: Rowe and Bridges, at least 45 games; Auker and Crowder, 15 games each; Marberry, 10 games, and Fischer, Hatter, Hogsett and Sullivan collectively estimated as being good for 10 games.

"Perhaps the figures will be juggled a bit," Mickey said, "but our pitching staff looks good enough to me for 100 victories."

College Baseball Scores.

Virginia, 5; William and Mary 5 (11 innings).
Hampden-Sydney, 5; Bridgewater, 2.
Washington and Lee, 6-5; V. P. I., 2-0.

200,000 Due To Witness Openers

Chicago Alone Basks in Weather Forecast of Fair and Warmer.

Spring Guesses Become Thing of the Past as Campaigns Start.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, April 15.—Despite the threat of being given a cold, wintry shoulder by old man weather, major league baseball will take off tomorrow in mass formation on a 154-game flight calculated to develop extraordinary competitive excitement and designed to recapture old-time prosperity.

The warm rays of a flirtatious spring sun today lifted the hopes of the faithful for a balmy setting for the opening ceremonies, at least in the East, but this proved quickly to be just another false start. The forecast is for a much colder turn of weather overnight along the Eastern Seaboard, with a parting salute from winter in the Middle West.

A snowstorm forced the champion Detroit Tigers to cancel their final workout. Cincinnati reported snow flurries but a sell-out, nevertheless, for the opening game at Crosley Field between the Reds and Pittsburgh Pirates.

Chicago Different.

Chicago's forecast alone was of the welcome "fair and warmer" variety for the opening which will pit the mighty Dizzy Dean of the world champion Cardinals against the great Lon Warneke of the Cubs.

Skies promise to be clear but overcoats will be necessary in the East for those who expect to turn out for the big day, either to join President Roosevelt in the send-off at Washington or to witness the debut of Babe Ruth as a National Leaguer in Boston against the opposition furnished by the celebrated Carl Hubbell and the New York Giants.

As part of the super-charged send-off, high officials of the two major leagues, headed by Presidents Ford C. Frick and Will Harridge, along with a group of ranking club managers, combined tonight in a Nation-wide broadcast. They joined not only in predicting close pennant races—an old baseball custom—but in forecasting bigger and better things for the game and its followers.

200,00 to See Games.

Latest reports from the scenes of the impending championship action indicated an aggregate turnout of at least 200,000 for the eight opening games tomorrow afternoon. National League estimates were for a total of 125,000 at the contests scheduled in Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Chicago. The American League's openers in New York, Detroit, St. Louis and Washington figured to attract less than 100,000.

Chicago topped the list with 42,000 predicted for Wrigley Field, where the Cubs and the Cardinals will renew their old rivalry. The Braves hoped to draw at least 35,000 for their opener with the Giants, despite the frigid weather. The Yankees expected another 35,000 to see the first "Ruthless" New York club in 15 years, with the Boston Red Sox furnishing the opposition. Predictions were for 30,000 to see the Tigers start the defense of the American League title against the White Sox, a similar turnout for the Cincinnati opener and a crowd of 25,000, including the Nation's Chief Executive, at Washington.

Trades Boost Interest.

No matter how chilly it may be for opening day, the roar of the crowds seems certain to warm the hearts of the club owners, who look forward hopefully to reaping the benefits of the winter's trading harvest, satisfying the popular appetite for spectacular competition and experimenting with night baseball in the National League.

From now on, however, the standing of the clubs and the game's crop of vital statistics will replace the dope sheets and guesswork of the spring. The fans will find out for themselves whether Babe Ruth can come back to damage the ramparts again, as a National Leaguer; whether the famous Dean brothers can duplicate their incredible feat of winning 49 games for the Cardinals; whether the New York Giants can fight their way back to the top, after their 1934 debacle in

Dreel Wins Harford Handicap Before 8,500 as Graw Opens

Fallon Gives $15.10 Shot Fine Ride

Star Porter and Nautch Set Early Pace, but Fail in Stretch.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

HAVRE DE GRACE RACE TRACK, Md., April 15.—The cerise and white of the Alfred Gwynn Vanderbilt stable, so prominent in Southern Maryland during the fortnight stay of the horses at Bowie, began a domination of northern Maryland racing here this afternoon. Dreel, half of the young millionaire's entry, which included Identify, won the Harford Handicap, opening-day feature here on the banks of the Susquehanna. The race has shrunk from a $10,000 to a $2,500 added event.

Faultlessly ridden by Jockey "Skinny" Fallon, Dreel outgamed Star Porter, the hope of Ral Parr, and Nautch, from the Howe stable, in a thrilling battle to the wire. Backers of the Vanderbilt pair, just recovering from the excitement of seeing Dreel win, had another thrill when a $15.10 mutuel was posted after the approximate odds board had shown the entry at a closing of 4 to 1.

The weather was as unreliable as the favorites. A bright sun welcomed the crowd of 8,500 to the track, but a windstorm arose as the first race was being run. During the second and third races rain sent the lawn customers scurrying for the stands, but shortly after the feature a warm sun appeared. However, a chilly wind came up and made the remainder of the afternoon most uncomfortable.

There was no rush for the daily double, such as marked pre-race activity at Bowie. In fact, this track has no "double," but when the mutuel play on the first race only shaded $21,000 officials began to wonder if they had not made a mistake.

Star Porter and Nautch jumped out of the starting gate as if they were going to make a private battle of the contest, involving a field of 11. Nautch finally wrested the lead from Star Porter and the pair banked the far turn with an advantage of several lengths over the field. However, Dreel was well up and Fallon swung to the outside for racing room. The hard use early in the going told on the front pair as Fallon pounded Dreel through the stretch, and the son of Trojan drew out to win going away.

No progress was made toward the apprehension of culprits who poisoned three horses at Bowie in an attempt to fix last Friday's feature race nor was there any indication that arrests would be made. With the close of Bowie, several persons who had been watched are reported to have left the State.

It was rumored that the Maryland racing commission may order the installation of flood lights and tamper-proof stable doors at all tracks.

The three horses affected by the poison were reported well on the road to recovery.

Postage Due Wins.

Postage Due, another of those fit Vanderbilt representatives, won impressively in his first start. Ridden by Johnny Bejshak, the son of High Time took the lead soon after the break and was never headed thereafter. Flying Falcon, placed second, made a determined bid in midstretch, but Bejshak gave his mount a stiff hand ride to draw away. Peter Pepper was third. The winner was the favorite at $4.50.

The ancient and honorable Judge Schilling stretched his old legs to win the second race in a drive that saw Cancel, a longshot, second and Merovech third. The 10-year-old was ridden by Bobby Merritt and the boy held him off the swift pace set by Immune. When the filly folded the Judge went to the front and he had to be ridden out to offset the closing rushes of Cancel and Merovech. Despite the short odds quoted on Judge Schilling, he paid a $9.40 mutuel.

Postscript Triumphs.

The rain came down in bucketfuls just before the third race and a mud-running daughter of Polymelia turned in the victory. Alertly handled by Jockey C. Critchfield, Postscript circled the leaders entering the stretch and then withstood a drive to defeat Candescent and Waterset in a field of 12. Dalmatia set a fast pace, but was tiring nearing the goal. Postscript was a $17.50 mutuel and was the first horse saddled by Trainer "Tobe" Trotter since his long suspension in Florida.

The secondary feature, the Elkridge, a sprint of 6 furlongs for 3-year-olds, went to Brown Twig, a son of Brown Bud, and carrying top weight of 115 pounds. "Mouse" Peters, the Nation's leading rider last year, gave a perfect exhibition of jockeyship and he outrode Pollard on Dancing Doll and Sammy Renick on City Slicker in the run for the wire.

Pays $18.70 Mutuel.

City Slicker and Dancing Doll battled to set the pace along the back stretch with Brown Twig under restraint. In the straightaway, Peters asked Brown Twig for speed and the colt went between the leaders. The mutuel was $18.70.

Midshipman came up the rail under severe punishment from the whip of Apprentice L. Dupre to take the sixth race in a blanket finish with Xandra and Popo. Ilchester, setting the pace, quit at the eighth pole. Only the judges could separate the three money horses.

Atmosphere won the finale from Cousin George and Polo Bar over the mile-and-70-yard course.

Yanks to St. Pete Again.

St. Petersburg, Fla., April 15.—The New York Yankees, of the American League, have signed a contract with the City of St. Petersburg to train in this city for the next five years, it was announced today.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al: Havre de Grace Race Track, April 15.

The Benningites who stuck with me after Saturday's disastrous card are counting their roll with beaming faces tonight, or they should be. We took this track by storm, and the only reason we didn't pick the daily double was because they didn't have a daily double. Four winners, three of them long shots, were rattled off this well-worn typewriter for the boys and girls. After pushing home the choice, Postage Due, in the first race at $4.50, we stepped on the gas and turned in Postscript, $17.50; Brown Twig, $18.70, and Dreel, $15.10. While on the subject of prices, the odds board at this track was about as much good as a Chinese laundry ticket to those trying to bet horses. Horses quoted 4-1 paid 7-1, and the favorite often became a long shot after the field reached the post. If ever a totalisator were needed, it was today. I was pleased because in each case my winners paid more than they were displayed. But I know hundreds who were governing their play by the board, and what they said coming back on the train almost flattened the wheels. If they can't give us the mechanical betting, let's have some more accurate chalk marks.

BILL.

First race—Someone Else is said to be a better juvenile than show in Bowie racing. Gilbert, a strong 2-year-old rider, has been assigned the saddle job and I expect no mistakes. The Vanderbilt entry of Cherry Stone and Parva Stella is the likely favorite and a keen factor. Conquer, a brisk worker, may be the surprise.

Second race—The Vanderbilt entry of Gum and Indelible stands out in this field. I believe we should accept about 8-5 and let it go at that. Gilbert, with the mount on Fan, is going to be close in the stretch. Paradun for the show.

Third race—Hogan's Fox seems best here and if the try is serious, this one shouldn't miss. Insomnia and Blessed Again for the place and show. Clocker Mike leans to the last-named.

Fourth race—Slipper King was so sharp at Bowie that I can not pass him up. Probably likes a longer route, but will be there or thereabouts in this field and I'm taking my chances. Stocks is said to be ready. Trainer Joe has whispered me a tip on Flaming Mamie. He says this one has been groomed for a killing.

Fifth race—Ladfield and Night Sprite should battle it out for this purse. Both are fit horses and have been assigned good riders. Red Wagon is a threat among this kind, but his lack of soundness makes him a question mark. Sun Monk might do, but not with J. Renick.

Sixth race—Ross has shown signs of being ready to score at this route. Gilbert is slated to ride and I'm stringing along. Happy Flag will go well and I'm putting Teddy Carl third. Clocker Mike prefers the last named on top.

Seventh race—Pencader is far too fit to be placed anywhere except on the front end of this group. Fallon can ride for my dough. Banderlog for the place and Flat Rock to show. Flat Rock may go well in the small field.

JUDGE SCHILLING, in close attendance of IMMUNE in early running, gained steadily when put to, to drive, wore the pacemaker down, then held on courageously in closing drive to withstand CANCEL. Latter followed close up early, then came with good energy under punishment in a close test. MEROVECH worked his way up on inside and fought it out stoutly nearing the finish.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—POSTSCRIPT, $17.50, $6.50, $4.60; CANDESCENT, $3.30, $2.60; WATERSET, $5.80.

POSTSCRIPT, lacking speed in early stages to maintain a forward position, worked her way up on the outside when improving her position, moved between leaders down, and came out nicely after gaining command. CANDESCENT, prominent from the beginning, was placed to stiff pressure in the last half-mile and held on with good courage. WATERSET went forwardly while saving ground and then finished stoutly when steered to the outside of the leaders.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; allowances. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:03. Off at 4:07½. Winner, Mrs. R. H. Heighe's br. c. BROWN TWIG, rated back of the leaders until approaching the home stretch, moved up fast to engage the pacemakers at the final furlong pole, drove through between the leaders, then outfinished DANCING DOLL during the closing furlong. DANCING DOLL, on the inside from the beginning, raced CITY SLICKER into submission, saved ground and continued willingly when challenged. CITY SLICKER quit badly after a half-mile. BLOODROOT closed fast in the final furlong. INDIAN NEWS was outrun.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. The Harford Handicap. Purse, $2,500 added. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:38. Off at 4:42. Winner, A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DREEL, $15.10, $5.20, $3.30; STAR PORTER, $2.90, $2.30; NAUTCH, $3.20.

DREEL, away quickly and kept in near pursuit of the leaders, responded strongly to gain command when reaching the home stretch, drew clear, then was taken under slight restraint approaching the finish. STAR PORTER, placed within striking distance of the pacemaker in the early running, challenged strongly when reaching the home stretch and held on well for the final drive. NAUTCH swerved badly when entering the home stretch, after having much speed, was straightened out and came again right at the end. ONLY ONE was hard ridden and showed a good effort. CHATMOSS could not engage the leaders. WISE PRINCE failed to rally when placed to a hard drive. SILENT SHOT was steered wide in the last three-sixteenths. SPEEDMORE was held safe. IDENTIFY had no excuses. LEGUME showed a dull effort.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:14. Off at once. Winner, Miss A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MIDSHIPMAN, $4.70, $2.80, $2.10; XANDRA, $4.00, $2.30; POPO, $2.10.

MIDSHIPMAN, reserved off the pace for the first six furlongs, secured racing room on the inside when moving into contention, came through on the inside of ILCHESTER entering the home stretch to gain command, but had to be shaken up strongly to last long enough. XANDRA, permitted to fall back after reaching the back stretch, swung to the outside in the last half-mile and finished with a rush. POPO had a lot taken out of him racing with ILCHESTER, but continued resolutely in the final issue. ILCHESTER was rated in front, but tired under his weight in the final test. LUCULENT could not better his position. FAIRLY WILD trailed far back.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:45. Off at 5:48½. Winner, R. Robertson's b. g. (4), by Wildair—La Religeuse. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 2-5, 0:49 2-5, 1:15 2-5, 1:42 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ATMOSPHERE, $10.40, $7.70, $5.10; COUSIN GEORGE, $10.20, $7.60; POLAR BAR, $5.50.

ATMOSPHERE, under steadying restraint while following along in near pursuit of BRIGHT BIRD, assumed command midway of the final clbow, was kept under slight pressure to draw clear, then came out steadily. COUSIN GEORGE went prominently in early running, then continued gamely when final test came. POLO BAR was sent into a contending position in the early part and came willingly when placed to a hard drive. DARKLING could not better her position when the closing drive came. BRIGHT BIRD was used up setting the pace and he tired after reaching the home stretch. PRETTY WISE went evenly. MINTANA was unable to reach a forward position. The others were held safe.

J. E. Widener's Chance Sun in Swift Test

Turns In Best Workout at Louisville; Weather Near Freezing.

By the Associated Press.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 15.—Joseph E. Widener's Chance Sun, winter book favorite to win the Kentucky Derby, turned in the best workout of the training season at Churchill Downs today. The colt, with track and weather conditions unfavorable, went the mile in 1:44 3-5, galloping out the last eighth.

Chance Sun did the first quarter in 0:24 1-5, the three-eighths in 0:36 1-5, the half in 0:48 2-5, the five-eighths in 1:01 1-5, the three-quarters in 1:14 and the seven-eighths in 1:28 4-5. At this point the boy was waved down by Trainer Peter Coyne and the colt galloped out the last eighth to complete the mile in 1:44 3-5. Silver Smith accompanied him.

The track, dusty on top, was spongy beneath from the recent heavy rains. The weather was close to freezing and the colt ran into a stiff northwest wind on the home stretch.

Weston, Jouett Shouse's Derby hopeful, running with Fiji, also turned in a good workout, but was asked to go only five-eighths of a mile. The colt's time was 1:01 1-5, the same as Chance Sun's for the five-eighths. He did the quarter in 0:22 4-5, the three-eighths in 0:35 1-5 and the half in 0:48 1-5.

Commonwealth Sent At Derby Route

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 15.—Commonwealth, Mrs. Walter Jefford's Kentucky Derby candidate, worked out here today at the derby distance and gave an impressive demonstration. He was clocked in 2:15 2-5 for the mile and a quarter. The fractional times were 0:50, 1:17, 1:45 2-5. Accompanied by Gold Standard, Commonwealth took the track and was only galloping through the last quarter-mile.

Trainer Preston Burch, of Washington, D. C., plans to start Commonwealth in Saturday's $7,500 Chesapeake, after which the colt will be shipped to the derby scene. C. V. Whitney's derby hope, Today, went six furlongs in 1:17.

80 Horses Vie Tomorrow in Virginia

Middleburg Race Meeting to Close; Six Races Are Scheduled.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., April 15.—With 80 entries listed for the second day of the Middleburg race meeting, many of these America's outstanding brush and timber horses, good racing over the beautiful Glenwood race course on the estate of D. C. Sands, M. F. H., Middleburg Hunt, is promised for the thousands expected to attend the meet on Wednesday, the closing day.

The racing last Saturday, the opening day, which was witnessed by a crowd estimated at 5,000, was good and furnished many thrills. The course, in spite of recent heavy rains, was in an excellent condition.

10 to Vie in Glenwood.

The Glenwood, a 3-mile timber race, feature of the program and scheduled for the third race, has 10 entries, all of them outstanding steeplechasers. The are B. Leslie Behr's Brose Hover, the 1930 winner of the Maryland Hunt Cup; Mrs. T. H. Somerville's Oliver C., a winner of the Aiken, S. C., Cup; Mrs. Vadim Kakaroff's Gigolo, winner of the Piedmont Hunt Cup at Llangollen last fall and second to Drinmore Lad in the Middleburg Cup last year; C. E. Parkins' Leguna Secca, winner of the Ayrshire Cup at Llangollen last fall; Paul Mellon's converted show ring horse Chatter Play, winner of the Rose Hill, a 3-mile timber race, on Saturday; Mrs. Simon Patterson

District Golf Pros Routed at Woodholme; Shorey Only Victor

First Award Annexed by Spencer

East Potomac Entrant Is Second; Hosts Also Take Twosome.

By Dave Herman.
A Staff Correspondent.

WOODHOLME COUNTRY CLUB, Baltimore, April 15. Washington golfers fared poorly today in the inaugural event of the Middle-Atlantic Professional Golf Association, as only Mel Shorey, East Potomac pro, was able to win one of the six prizes.

Shorey placed second in the 18-hole professional sweepstakes this morning by virtue of his 77, yielding top honors to Glenn Spencer, tall Maryland Country Club tutor, who posted a 76, 3 over par.

The pro-amateur tournament also went to a Baltimore pair, Bill Schrieber, pro at the Clifton-Park-Mount Pleasant course, and Erford G. Barnes, of Hillendale. They stroked over the soggy, wind-swept 6,731 yard layout in 73, fine score considering the conditions. Early in the afternoon a rainstorm broke, and the pelting rain continued for at least half an hour.

Tie For Runner-Up.

Carroll MacMaster, pro, and Al London, of Woodholme, tied for runner-up prize in the pro-amateur with Alex Taylor, Rolling Road pro, and his simon-pure partner, Spencer Overton. They carded 39-35—74, to nose out the District combination of Leo Walper, Bethesda Driving Range pro, and Sam Rice, of Indian Spring, the reformed big league baseball player. Walper and Rice teamed to score 37-38—75.

Participants considered the Woodholme course, which has a par of 38 and four par five holes on the first nine, the toughest layout they have encountered in the Middle-Atlantic section. It is the only course in this section with a par 73.

Al Houghton, of Kenwood, was forced to pick up in his morning round. Houghton didn't even break 80. In the afternoon he teamed with Ed Olsen, golf chairman at Kenwood, and again he was forced to pick up. He started with a six, and took an eight on another hole. Roland MacKenzie, Congressional pro, ordinarily a long driver, found Old Man Par too tough, and he and his partner, W. R. McCallum, were unable to make the grade. They, too, picked up.

Favorites Card 76.

George Diffenbaugh and Roger Peacock, of Indian Spring, pro-amateur favorites, took 40 strokes on the outgoing side, and had a 36 coming in.

Shorey attributed his failure to win the pro sweepstakes to three-putt greens on the seventeenth and eighteenth, where he took fives. On the other hand, Spencer, the winner, came within 5 yards of driving the 304-yard seventeenth, pitched dead and sank his putt for a birdie three-the margin by which he won first prize.

Barney Ross Quits Lightweight Title

match between Ambers and Tony Canzoneri, former title holder, probably would get title recognition here.

Others File Claims.

In addition, such lightweights as Davey Day, Chicago, stablemate of Ross; the Italian veteran, Cleto Locatelli; Frankie Klick, of San Francisco, who has fought Ross twice, once to a draw, and Leonard Del Genio, belting New York youngster, all prepared to move in on the commission bright and early tomorrow with their claims.

As soon as he heard the news, Jimmy Johnson, matchmaker at Madison Square Garden, got the managers of Ambers and Canzoneri together and came so close to an immediate agreement that he promised to have their signed contracts before the commission tomorrow.

Jacobs said that if the commission wants to let everyone get into the fray in an elimination tournament, he'll stage it and turn all the profits over to the National Sports Alliance fund for needy fighters. Johnson is secretary of the alliance and has charge of disbursing the funds, a unique angle of the liveliest promotional war New York has seen since Tex Rickard's days.

Won Title in 1933.

Ross, who won the lightweight championship from Canzoneri in Chicago, June 23, 1933, and defended it only once against Tony here the same fall, weighed only 136½ pounds for his non-title match last Tuesday with Henry Woods in Seattle. His managers said, however, he was weak even at that weight, and so they decided he must never try to make 135 pounds again.

Georgetown, Maryland Nines Play on Foreign Fields Today

COLLEGE baseball's tremendous drawing power will not affect today's big league opening at Griffith Stadium, inasmuch as the campus teams scheduled are playing out of town. George Washington meets Delaware, while Maryland opens a five-day trip through Virginia at Richmond, where it meets the Spiders.

Tomorrow, however, the big leaguers have to scratch for their attendance since Georgetown refuses to postpone its game with Penn State or move it to another field. This game gets under way at 3 o'clock.

Coach Ed Morris, of George Washington, is in a fine stew for a pitcher, since Bill Noonan is the only one in good health. Not that Bill isn't capable, but a fellow can't pitch every game on the schedule.

First, Cal Griffith was called to Chattanooga to run the Lookouts. Bill Tarver was stricken with the flu—recovered—and was sent to bed with a second attack. That left Vince De Angelis and Noonan. Pretty soon only Noonan was left when De Angelis sprained an ankle.

Noonan, former Eastern High School lad, won 17 games in the Industrial League last season and appears to be ready for some winning efforts this year.

Maryland has not completely recovered from the shock of losing to Washington College Saturday. The Eastern Shore delegation was known to be strong, but not that strong. The result probably will bring a favorable reaction, since one defeat does not spoil an entire season.

Jannazzo Wins Over Furr in Feature

Wade Stopped by Zinkham in Sixth Round at Auditorium.

By Bill McCormick.

BUSY IZZY JANNAZZO, New York welterweight, slapped out a unanimous decision over Phil Furr, District 145-pound champion, in a one-sided 10-round battle to climb out of the cellar position in national rankings at the Auditorium last night.

Zinkham Stops Wade.

LeRoy Zinkham, angular knockerout from Baltimore, won on a technical knockout after 40 seconds of the sixth and last scheduled round of a semi-final with Jimmy Wade, who was making his bow here from Miami. Wade won the first four rounds and drew the fifth on The Post scoresheet, despite the fact that he was on the floor twice in the second round for nine counts.

In that round, after having the round safely won by flooring Wade for nine with a terrific right to the head, Zinkham deliberately butted, to lose the round on our tally. After the foul he again floored Wade for nine with a right uppercut.

The semi-final came to an untimely end after Wade had been sent crashing to the canvas for nine with a long right to the jaw within 10 seconds after the gong for the sixth, then sent down again for nine with a right uppercut. Wade was on his knees when Referee Charley Reynolds decided he had enough and halted the proceedings, greatly to the disgust of Wade's handlers and many of the spectators.

Miller Beats Baker.

Baby Miller, a Cuban-Seminole imported from Florida, took a unanimous decision from Phil Baker, a Philadelphia lightweight, in a one-sided but interesting six-rounder. Miller entered the ring wearing an Indian head dress and he might have boxed the entire six rounds with it on without getting a feather ruffled, so elusive did he prove. While being elusive, he peppered Baker's anatomy from long range and if the Philadelphia flailer wasn't puzzled by his southpaw style, he was by his foot work.

Roy Manley, the Little Rock southpaw fought six gruelling rounds to a draw with Pete Bevans, a Washington welterweight, to leave their status as local challengers for Phil Furr's diadem as much in doubt as before. Bevans played a steady tatto to Manley's midsection as Manly retaliated with long lefts to the head.

Joe Teems, the first of the newly imported fighters to show, won on a second-round technical knockout from Pete Powell, of Newport News, in an opener scheduled for six rounds. The Florida Greek belabored Powell mightily through the first round, then swept him to the floor in the second for nine, forcing his seconds to toss in the towel.

Barney Welsh Is No. 4 at Pinehurst

Is Placed on Seeded List After Grant Decides to Forego Play.

By the Associated Press.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 15.—Bryan Grant, little Atlanta court marvel, today decided to pass up the North and South tennis tournament this year and wired a first-round default to the tournament committee.

The Atlantan, seeded second, advised he was unable to take the time for the tournament, his work necessitating his remaining in Atlanta.

As a result of Grant's withdrawal, Barney Welsh, of Washington, the National Public Parks champion, was added to the seeded list as No. 4. Wilmer Allison, Austin, Tex., is top seeded. J. Gilbert Hall, Orange, N. J., took over the second seeded post and Hal Surface, Kansas City, was advanced from No. 4 to No. 3.

Allison and Welch will arrive tomorrow. The Texan was given a first-round bye, while Welsh received a default for the opening round from George Taylor, University of North Carolina.

W. & M. Nine in Tie With Virginia, 5-5

Game Is Called at End of Eleventh Inning.

By the Associated Press.

Williamsburg, Va., April 15.—William and Mary and Virginia played an 11-inning 5-5 tie here this afternoon, each team scoring a run in the final frame. The game was called because of darkness.

Marable, for the Indians, and Rogers and Hoff, for the Cavaliers, led their teams in hitting, each getting two.

Bouldin, of Virginia, was removed from the game in the eleventh when he hurt his leg after Benedetto collided with him sliding into first.

Moore made a beautiful catch off the fence in the fifth.

Fred Perry, Jilted, May Enter Movies and Reside in America

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, April 15.—Mary Lawson, British actress, broke off her engagement to Fred Perry today and thereby precipitated fresh speculation as to the Davis Cup star's tennis future.

Although the actress said she had broken the engagement because Perry had informed her that he planned to accept a film offer in Hollywood and expected to live in the United States, S. J. Perry, the player's father, declared there was nothing to the report.

"I have been in touch with my son telephonically and by cable over the week-end," he said. "He tells me he definitely has turned down a film offer and will remain an amateur and play tennis here this year."

But Miss Lawson had a different story to tell.

"I have a cable from Fred saying he will accept a film offer in Hollywood," she said. "That's all there is to be said. I don't blame him for that but my work and my interests are in England and I intend to remain here. We had a telephone talk last night and reached the decision to end the engagement."

The London Evening Standard contributed its bit to the discussion by publishing a cable, purported to have been received from Perry, indicating he had decided to enter the movies.

Perry's entrance into the movies would not necessarily result in forfeiture of his amateur status unless his fame as a tennis player were capitalized by his employers and pictures featuring him included tennis action shots.

Hollywood, Calif., April 15 (AP).—Fred Perry, world tennis champion, has not turned professional "despite many rumors to the contrary," an acquaintance said here tonight shortly after the net star left for New York en route to his native England, where he will compete in tennis tournaments.

He departed after being informed his British actress fiancee, Mary Lawson, said in London today that she had broken their engagement because he intended to follow a movie career and live in Hollywood.

Cold Weather Forecast Fails to Chill Fans' Annual Interest.

the stretch; or whether the Detroit Tigers have the stuff to withstand the challenges from such powerful clubs as Clevelan and New York and prove their conquest of the American League last year was not a fluke.

Ruth will be the main focus of interest, for at least the first few weeks of the National League campaign. The 40-year-old Bambino, slow in the field, nevertheless packs the old punch and all will be forgiven if he can find the old range again. He helped the Braves break attendance records throughout the "Grapefruit League" and he will likely pack 'em in for at least one swing around the National League circuit, where he will have a flock of inviting right-field targets. If he can play in as many as 100 games, the Babe's power may be sufficient to keep the Braves in a contending position.

Deans Another Angle.

The Deans offer another intriguing angle of National League interest. Together they just about hurled the Cardinals past the faltering Giants and into the National League pennant last season. Subsequently, they accounted for all four of the St. Louis triumphs in the world series. Dizzy Dean, elder of the pair and victor in 30 games last year, will be the target of all rival "jockeys" as well as batsmen this season. He is not likely to do so well, under this pressure, but only an accident can keep him from winning 20 or more games. Meanwhile, Paul Dean may prove much more effective as a sophomore than he was as a freshman and keep the family's output up to extraordinary level.

It will take all that the Deans and the rambunctious Cardinals can produce, however, to stop the comeback of the Giants. Bill Terry has four pitching aces to match Frankie Frisch's pair, who are not likely to repeat their trick of beating New York in 12 out of 14 starts.

Boast More Speed.

The Cardinals have more speed but no greater punch than the Giants, with Dick Bartell and Hank Leiber now in the regular line-up. It should be a bitter pennant battle between these two clubs, with Chicago or Pittsburgh ready to jump in if either shows signs of cracking.

In the American League, the prospect is for a much closer race among more clubs. It will be up to the Tigers to prove they weren't lucky last season, when Mickey Cochrane's leadership provided the spark that made a pennant-winner out of a fifth-place club. Cleveland's powerful Indians, fortified with great right-handed pitching, are the choice of a majority of baseball writers but the team is handicapped now by an inexperienced infield and doubtful backstopping.

Yanks May Set Pace.

The Yankees, developing fast under Joe McCarthy, figure to make it a three-cornered scrap and may be the pace-setter. This New York outfit is no longer the wrecking crew of old, but it has speed, power and perhaps the best all-round pitching staff in the league.

Babe Ruth will start his twenty-second season in active play while nearly a score of rookies make their big league debut tomorrow. Many other old familiar figures will appear in new uniforms. Bucky Harris resumes his old job as pilot of the Washington Senators while his place with the Boston Red Sox is taken by Joe Cronin in the only managerial shifts since the end of last season. The aces of both leagues will be on the firing line with Carl Hubbell, Van Mungo, Curt Davis, Dizzy Dean, Lon Warneke, Wes Ferrell, Lefty Gomez, "Schoolboy" Rowe, Mel Harder and Earl Whitehill all slated for starting assignments.

Navy's Gymnasts Score Over Army

Defeat First in 26 Meets for West Pointers.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, April 15.—The Naval Academy chalked up another victory over the Army today as the result of the triumph of the Navy gymnasium team over the West Point gymnasts in the individual competition Saturday of the Eastern Interscholastic Gymnasium League.

The Navy defeated Army, 39 to 15, in the dual meet run coincident with the individual tests, and computed on the basis of the individual scoring. It was the first defeat for the Army gymnasts in 26 meets and the first time the service schools had clashed in a dual meet.

The fight for the Eastern intercollegiate gymnasium title ended in a triple tie between Temple, Army and Navy. Temple defeated Navy in a dual meet; Army defeated Temple, and Navy defeated Army.

Central Blasts Marblehead Nine, 13-4

Visitors, Runners-up for State Title in 1934, Lost One Inning.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., once famous for its whaling industry and more famous in recent years for its fast high school athletic teams, sent one of the latter against Central High's ball team in an intersectional game at Central Stadium yesterday afternoon. The young men of Marblehead apparently should have gone in for whaling, for they were just a second-rate ball club before the slugging pupils of Coach Jack Ray, who romped to a 13-to-4 victory.

The team which was runner-up for the Massachusetts High School championship last year, lasted one brief inning and then the Central batting explosives were touched off to roll up seven runs in the second frame and diminish in significance the home run with which Bill Loveday, of Marblehead, had started the game. The Raymen knocked two pitchers out of the box and were beginning to solve a third, but cheated themselves of a ninth turn at bat.

Plays Plebes Today.

Marblehead will play the Navy Plebes today, Eastern tomorrow and Western Thursday. Supporters of the visitors consoled themselves with the remark that Ed Day, their star pitcher, was being saved yesterday for the Plebes.

At any rate, once Coach Ray had cut loose with his heaviest guns, it might well have been a sad Day, or any other pitcher, in the box. For instance, after Loveday had clouted his homer all Eastern did was come back with a homer with three on. Frank Moran and Reed Taylor singled and Walter Smith, a combination pitcher, outfielder and slugger, banged one of the longest homers ever seen at Central, which sailed far over the left fielder's head over the football east end zone.

Boost Score to 7-1.

Hits by Shorty Chumbris and Ray Gibson, aided by a couple of walks, ran the score up to 7 to 1 by the close of the second frame. Marblehead added its second run in the fourth when Cudahy scored after singling, but Central hit back with three more on walks to Taylor and Smith and singles by Don Dunlap and the little Chumbris. The latter was the prize hitter of the day, connecting sharply for three safeties in five trips to the plate.

This made it 10 to 2, but two walks and a single by Moran in the next frame added two more and the locals added another in the sixth for good measure. Marblehead was held for four hits by young Lefty Heft in the first five innings and three over the last four by Gump Morris, bunching three in the eighth for its last two runs.

Stocks Move Slightly Higher In Active Day

Leading Chemicals Rise 1 to 2 Points; Wright Aero Up 4.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 15.—The market see-sawed today, but was tilting upward toward the close of trading. Advances, while generally small, well outnumbered declines at the finish.

Failure of the Supreme Court to render its long-awaited decision in the railroad pension cases, caused some disappointed liquidation in the carrier shares around mid-day, and the first setback in over a fortnight in the price of bar silver prompted some selling in the nonferrous metal group. Even in these divisions, however, the closing tone was improved over the lowest for the day.

The turnover picked up moderately to pass the million share mark for the first time in some ten days, at 1,107,030 shares. A good part of the increase came in the early dealings when the market, especially in the specialty group, was finding takers at moderately advancing levels.

A number of chemicals had advances of 1 to 2 points or so, including Allied Chemical, Du Pont, Atlas Powder, Monsanto, Westvaco, and U. S. Industrial Alcohol, while specialties advancing included Auburn, General Cigar, Ingersoll-Rand, Union Bag and White Motor. Some of the aircraft shares found a following, led by a 4-point lift in Wright Aero to 49¼. The latter is traded in 10-share units, and volume today was not especially heavy.

Rubber shares attracted some attention at rising prices, especially the preferred issues. American Telephone finished even at 107, unaffected by the announcement of earnings of $1.61 a common share in the first three months of this year, compared with $1.77 in the same period of 1934. Higher wage costs were mentioned officially as one of the leading causes of the lower profit.

Sales Offset Wheat Advance

Cotton Market Steady After Realizing and Scattered Selling.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 15.—Wheat scored a brisk upturn of prices late today, but reacted on account of heavy sales to realize profits in the final dealings.

The advance of wheat values was stimulated by sensationally bullish crop news. R. O. Cromwell, a leading unofficial crop expert, telegraphing today from Salina, Kans., said: "Of 12,000,000 acres of wheat west of the hundredth meridian, 90 per cent has been wiped out completely."

Wheat closed nervous, ⅛ to ⅝ under yesterday's finish, May, 1.00⅛@100⅝; corn 1¾ lower to ⅛ advance, May, 88⅜@88¼; oats, ⅜ off to ¼ up, and provisions unchanged to 15 cents down.

Contributing as an incentive to desire to seize profits on price bulges was announcement of a large purchase of red winter wheat to come to Chicago from St. Louis. On the other hand, Cromwell's report said high winds and dust Southwest had been killing wheat more quickly and over wider territory than ever before seen. A reduction of 2,280,000 bushels in the United States wheat visible supply total today was also a transient bullish factor.

Unexpected downturns of wheat values today at Liverpool weakened the Chicago market at the outset, and led to an abrupt tumble that temporarily carried all futures to below $1.00.

Corn and oats averaged lower, influenced a good deal by an unofficial estimate that the new Argentine corn crop would establish a top record as to volume of exportable surplus.

Provisions sagged with hog values and with corn.

The Federal Diary

Trade-Mark Registered U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

A POLL of all members of Congress is under way, conducted by Mrs. Harriet H. Sheppard, executive secretary of the Government Workers Council, to determine their attitude on section 213 (marriage clause) of the economy act.

BAKER.

Mrs. Sheppard is receiving the co-operation of the American Federation of Government Employes in the survey. The AFGE is supporting the Celler bill, H. R. 5051, to prohibit discriminations against persons because of their marital status. Hearings on the bill will begin this week, probably Thursday.

The questionnaire asks:

1. Do you believe in the merit system?

2. Do you believe in discriminations against Government employes because of their marital status?

3. Will you vote for the bill, H. R. 5051, which upholds the merit system and removes the marital status as grounds for dismissal from Government service?

The Government Workers Council is composed of representatives of various groups opposed to the retention of section 213. Aligned with it in opposition to the married persons clause are listed the National Women's Trade Union League, the National League of Women Voters, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, the Women's Homeopathic Medical Society, the Women's Bar Association, the American Association of University Women, the National Women's Party and the Washington Chapter of the American Association of Social Workers.

Collaborating on a signaling apparatus for aircraft, Lawrence Hyland (F), and Malcolm P. Hanson (P), both of Navy, have just obtained a patent. The device depends upon the air encountered, rather than motive force, to indicate by a number of repeated signals the location and speed of the craft.

The twenty-first anniversary party will be under direction of Harry H. McCall, general chairman; Robert E. Johnson (F), finance and tickets; John J. O'Connell, entertainment and dance; C. C. Gillikin, program and reception, and Robert H. Alcorn and Harry T. Morningstar.

ADDED incentive in the spring membership drive of the National Federation of Federal Employes has been furnished in the form of additional prizes by the national headquarters and several of the local unions here.

Local No. 2, said to be the largest Federal employes union in Washington, announces a monthly cash award to the branch of that organization reporting the most new members. No. 2 also plans to give a percentage prize for best membership results at the end of the campaign, July 1.

Treasury Local No. 262 offers an all-expenses-paid week-end trip to Atlantic City for the member of that union securing the most additional members during the drive.

Mourn for Mrs. Lee.

There is sorrow today in the Register's Office, Treasury, over the death Sunday of Mrs. Kitty Lee, who was for 17 years an employe of that division and at her post until last Thursday. A talented musician, Mrs. Lee played an active role in Washington music circles. She had traveled extensively and had a host of friends throughout the Capital.

Object— Not Matrimony

By Lillian Barker

On her eighteenth birthday, Katrina Harman discovers that her fortune has been lost. She learns, too, that Tazewell Bronson, whom she loves, does not intend to marry her. She determines never to see him again, although unfortunately she is indebted to him to the extent of several hundred dollars, for which he has her I. O. U. She loses one job because he reappears on the horizon, but she manages to avoid him. He does not know that she is working as companion to an elderly woman, Mrs. Fremys-Dillon, but he finds her and comes to her hotel late at night.

MAKING the most of an unexpected opportunity, Taz seized the hand Trina had thrust over his mouth, kissing each finger-tip separately.

"There, that's what you get, young lady, for having the loveliest, the most kissable hand in the world!"

He grinned and Katrina tried her best to look furious, indignant, but all she really did was to frown—imperceptibly.

What a little goose she was, so helpless and so disgustingly in love with Taz Bronson, still! The power he had over her . . . how she'd let her heart run away with her that night in the Miramar Club . . . that should be an everlasting lesson. Such men as Tazewell were dangerous . . . insidiously dangerous . . ."

Confession to Make.

"The letters, honey, aren't we going to mail them?" Taz inquired. "And the parlor I was telling you about! It's a perfect place for a tete-a-tete, the kind of heart-to-heart talk I drove down from New York just to have with you. This whispered conversation isn't getting us anywhere. It not only cramps my style, it's actually blocking off a confession, a very intimate confession I want to pour into those pretty little ears of yours. Come on, baby girl. Please, please come with me, Trina."

The door snapping to behind him, Taz swept Katrina down the hotel corridor into which he'd just lured her by that talk about an "inimate confession" he wanted to make and by an all-persuading pull on the arm.

"Look, darling, there's the mail-chute . . . over there to your left, see it?" he exclaimed. "Let me have your letters." And upon Trina's surrender of them, "That's the girl! You are a sweet thing, aren't you?"

The letters disposed of, with a sophomoric swinging of hands—Tazewell doing the swinging—they continued on to their parlor destination.

Must Talk to Her.

"A dozen steps more and we'll be in that 'perfect place for a tete-a-tete,'" he promised. "I just hope nobody's beat us to it."

"If anyone has, it won't be such a 'perfect place' for your—for your confession, will it?" replied Katrina.

"I'll say it won't, but at midnight . . . It's way after midnight, really . . . I doubt if anybody's barged into the parlor. I imagine we're the only prowlers-around. You see for yourself, this corridor is all ours."

But it wasn't. For scarcely had Taz finished his gloating when a door they were passing swung open and out of it bristled a hotel maid who proceeded to give them the "once-over."

"Bragged too soon, didn't I?" Tazewell smiled.

"Your bragging was a bit premature," Trina agreed. Not, however, till they were settled on a divan in the parlor which they did, for a fact, have to themselves. "And how that girl, that maid, stopped and stared at us? What do you suppose she was thinking?"

An Audacious Youth.

"That my little girl friend, my little goldilocks in the black sophisticated gown was the most dazzingly beautiful creaure in all this gigantic hotel." Tazewell's dark-dark brown eyes twinkled down into Katrina's dark-dark blue ones. "Oh, yes, honey, you'd stop traffic anywhere! Especially in this get-up. Remember how I raved about it the night of our birthday celebration? How did you happen to have on my favorite frock tonight, though? Did you have a hunch I was coming?"

"I most certainly did not. I knew you were nervy of course, but I never dreamed you'd have the audacity to knock on Mrs. Fremys-Dillon's door . . ."

"Trina, I'd have the audacity to do anything to see you. I had to see you, as I said. You've been on my conscience . . . night and day . . . ever since our separation at the Holts. And yesterday when I found you waiting on tables in a restaurant . . . well, it simply tore the heart out of me. You don't know how I suffered."

Must Not See Tears.

"I know how I suffered when I saw you. . . . and when thta luncheon-tray slipped from my hands and spattered hors d'oeuvres on your sister's dress. Talk about excruciating moments . . .!"

Katrina regarded the very pointed toes of her pumps through a mirage of tears. Taz mustn't see those tears, however. He pitied her too much as it was.

But he did see the tears. Moreover, he wiped them away, deftly and tenderly, with his own handkerchief, and said:

"You poor kid! Muriel has a quick temper, I'll admit! Still, if she'd known the circumstances, who you were and all, I feel sure she wouldn't have flared up so. She thought you were just a careless waitress till I told her better. But what an experience for you, my dear! What an experience!

"How did you ever come to take up such degrading work, though, Trina?" Taz asked. "These little hands," he caught up the one he'd just kissed, finger by finger, "were never meant for menial service. The idea of you—you, Katrina Harman—packing trays around, serving food to people! Promise me you'll never put yourself in such a position again, never as long as you live. The very thought is revolting."

Independent Spirit.

Her eyes, now flashing with pride and confidence, her lips firm with assurance, Katrina said:

"Don't worry, Tazewell, I won't ever have to put myself in such a position again. I have a perfectly grand position with Mrs. Fremys-Dillon. For just as long as I wish. And soon, next month, in just about two weeks, imagine the thrill of it for me—we're going on a 'round the-world' tour! I'm so excited.

"The job's a cinch, too, easy as falling off a log. Practically all I have to do is to keep the lady entertained, speak and read French to her. Educated in a Paris convent, she's absolutely off on the subject of this language. It seems to be her greatest weakness.

"Well, that's a break for you, isn't it, since you were Mme Jaquemart's prize pupil 'en Francais.' Also, in music, weren't you? Madam confided all this to me one visiting day while I was waiting for you in her salon. Of course, I knew about the music. I'd heard you play and sing Southern melodies at one of the school entertainments. And how you put 'em over, baby! No professional could've beat you."

Talent Was Obvious.

"So you say?"

"And so say others, don't fool yourself. You 'wowed' everybody with your warbling and piano playing at the Holts musical tea last April. Elena said then that you had talents; that you never had to dig for anything."

"I've had to dig for a living all right," Katrina interrupted, "and that's the hardest digging of all, as I've recently found out. Now, though, I seem to be 'sittin' pretty', don't I?"

"You surely do, kid, and the amazing thing to me is you're cashing in on your 'fancy, impractical education' which I rated just about zero commercially, if you remember."

"If I remember! That's something I'll never be able to forget. You can not imagine the impression it made upon me, coming as it did right after I'd read the telegram about the bank crash . . . when I was brought face to face with the fact that I was practically penniless, alone, adrift in the world."

Trina shuddered and Taz, rebukingly sympathetic, reminded her:

Elena Wanted Her.

"You didn't have to be alone, adrift. That was your own doing. Both Elena Holt and her mother moved heaven and earth to keep you with them. And as for me . . . well, this brings me to my confession."

Straightening her shoulders which had been drooping just a little, Katrina said: "Go on with your confession, Tazewell, please. I'm . . . I'm palpitant to hear it."

"I will," eyebrows drawn together. "It is'nt easy, though. It's so very, very intimate. In the first place, I shall have to drag out certain family skeletons. I'm also afraid of hurting your feelings, for inevitably I'll have to tread on delicate ground, I'll be forced to bring up things about which you're supersensitive. However . . ."

"However," repeated Taz, "to begin at the beginning, "you got me all wrong that last night at Elena's and for the sake of my own peace of mind I'm determined to set myself right in your eyes, as I told you."

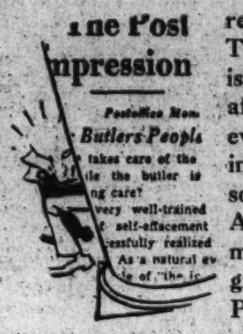
"Shipwreck" Kelly, the flag-pole sitter, lives on top of columns . . . and steeples, too.

The Post Impressionist has been living behind a column for some time, now. We still don't know much about him. He hides behind a mask of anonymity, and when we approach his column to get a better view of him, he scurries around the other side like a squirrel on a tree.



Thousands of our readers, who turn to The Post Impressionist's spicy column right after the orange juice every morning, have implored us to tell something about him. According to them, more legends have grown up about The Post Impressionist than about Paul Bunyan or Santa Claus. Everyone wants to know more about him.

Well, we'll tell you what we know. The Post Impressionist is real, despite his anonymity. He is a world traveler. He knows the European Big Shots by their first names (he knew about Hitler when Der Fuehrer was just plain Adolf!) and for years, he reported the doings of the League of Nations at Geneva.

He has been a war correspondent, and has sat with the generals in their bombproof dugouts, and with the privates in their muddy ditches. His battered typewriter has tapped out stories of gallant charges, of heart-breaking defeats, in more than one war.

And he has written books in the best-seller class, too. He is perfectly at home at a literary tea, where the long-haired authors and the giggling spinsters gather. But for that matter, he would be perfectly at home in a Hottentot village, for he has been everywhere and he has seen, well, almost everything.

But we still don't know his name. We know only that, as The Post Impressionist, he has endeared himself to tens of thousands of readers, that his column is one of the most intelligent and amusing in the world, that his exceedingly civilized viewpoint is that of a true gentleman, that you can not afford to miss reading him every morning.

He's still hiding behind his column. He won't tell us his name. But he can remain behind that column, in peaceful anonymity, if only he'll continue to write The Post Impressionist for the editorial page of The Washington Post.

AN underground factory, a mile back from the entrance, was established deep in Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, during the War of 1812, to produce nitrates for the U. S. Government's gunpowder.

Negroes who served as laborers in the underground plant remained inside the cave a year without coming out. Vats and other equipment used in the preparation of the nitrates may still be seen in the cave.

Strange as it seems, the water-flea (Daphnia), a crustacean, lays eggs that will still hatch 10 years after they are laid. This unusual power protects the species from extinction during cold or drought, and the eggs simply lie dormant instead of hatching out under unfavorable conditions. When favorable conditions again exist the eggs hatch out, and thus the water-flea's young escape winter and drought.

The crustacean lays two kinds of eggs, one called the winter egg and the other the summer egg. The winter eggs are those that have the power of living over long periods. They are laid generally in the fall, although they may be laid at other times of the year, and are fertilized. They are darker, larger and better protected than the so-called summer eggs which are unfertilized and which are laid the year around.

Pere David's deer are extinct in wild life, and have been for centuries. The only ones known were those kept in captivity in the Orient until some were brought to England a few years ago.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

The Federal Communications Commission, the networks and local stations have started spring cleaning, this time turning their attentions to medical advertising. Radio Art reports that one medical sponsor, with a four-year-old air program behind him, has taken up an option in renewal time for the rest of the year, knowing full well that if he didn't he'd never get back on the networks at all and would have to resort to spot broadcasts.

N. B. C.'s salesmen were given an order to the effect that at the expiration of existing medically sponsored broadcasts, no new accounts shall be solicited. Grounds: That the types of plug necessary to sell the articles does not fit in with radio as an advertising medium.

All of which is a good idea, in some cases, but it is hoped that this reform action doesn't consume as many words as the tumult over children's programs. The tumult and the shouting still goes on—the latest leaflet from the national committee on education by radio devotes its entire space to the subject.

Interesting sidelight. A report that N. B. C. will put on a new horror program modifies the shock by carefully explaining that the time is set for midnight, when all well-brought-up children should be in bed. Further, the new series is distinctly not for adults with weak hearts, since it is the ultimate in horror, radio or otherwise.

Lots of air time is taken up with baseball today. Columbia broadcasts the St. Louis Cards versus the Chicago Cubs at 3, WJSV. Ted Husing will do the heavies.

The Nationals versus the Athletics will be broadcast from Griffith Stadium on WMAL at 2:45 p. m., interrupted by Betty and Bob at 4 and on again at 4:15 p. m.

Good spots:

Fibber McGee and Molly make their debut on WMAL, 10 p. m. A new comedy team, they offer tall stories and banter, suitable for children and adults.

American School of the Air, WJSV, 2:30 p. m., dramatizes the "Legend of Sleepy Hollow."

N. B. C. Music Guild presents a program of Beethoven and Mozart compositions, WRC, 1:30 p. m.

Ethel Shutta is guesting with Ben Bernie, WRC, 9:00 p. m.

"The Pirates of Penzance" is interrupted by the baseball game, so you'll have to catch it on WJSV, 760 kilocycles.

"Naughty Marietta" is on WRC, 10 p. m. Francia White and John Barclay play leading roles.

Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris are expected to appear on Radio Joe's program, 6:15, WRC.

Other good dialings: Bing Crosby, WJSV, 9 p. m. . . . Phil Spitalny's girls' show, WJSV, 9:30 p. m. . . . Walter O'Keefe, WJSV, 10 p. m. . . . Edgar Guest in "Welcome Valley," WMAL, 8:30 p. m. . . . Ed Wynn, WRC, 9:30 p. m. . . . Easy Aces, WRC, 7:30 p. m.

China and U. S. Called Only Peaceful Nations

China and the United States are the only countries in the world not mad for war, Judge Paul M. Linebarger, legal adviser to the Chinese government, last night told the Men's Club of the Covenant Presbyterian Church.

These two countries are "politically sane," Judge Linebarger said. He declared that the real "public enemies" of the world are the forces which push it toward war, and that Communism is "Public Enemy No. 1" of this group.

THEY NEVER BLAMED THEIR FATHER BUT . . .

THEIR father left them "well fixed." So naturally they didn't blame him when his estate quickly dwindled away . . . when what they called "unfortunate investments" compelled them to make drastic changes in their mode of living.

Yet this man might easily have provided his wife with ample income for life . . . might have made it unnecessary for his children to leave school and go to work . . . His estate was large enough to have yielded the comforts and protection he desired his family to enjoy.

Our booklet on life insurance trusts tells how, through proper planning of your estate, you can have the American Security & Trust Company carry on the management of your property and give your family lifetime protection. Stop in or write or phone for a copy.

Relieve Periodic Pain and Discomfort

"Next time" try Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets. These women tell you how good they are.

MRS. CAROLINE NEWMAN
Rt. #1, Barboursville, West Virginia

The modern woman can't be bothered with cramps and menstrual discomforts. Periodic upsets are not going to interfere with her normal activities if she can help it. And she can.

Next month try Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets. They relieve periodic pain and discomfort such as backache and headache. It's silly to suffer when the trial size is only 25 cents. At your drug store.

"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets for painful periods. I used to suffer severe pains in my back and had to stay in bed most of the day. Your Tablets were recommended by a friend. Since taking them I am greatly relieved of the pains."—Mrs. Caroline Newman.

Was In Bed Two Days

Mrs. Sara Stearns, 676 West Willis Ave., Detroit, Michigan says: "All during the month I felt fine until those terrible pains came. I used to stay in bed two days. Your Tablets stopped the pain and I recommend them highly."

"They Stopped the Pain"

"Every month I was in bed a day or two. These Tablets stopped the pain. I am not bothered any more."—Mrs. Grace L. Boconis, 1761 East 105th Street, Los Angeles, California.

Mrs. Bob Mobley, 3105 Belmont Ave., Tampa, Florida says, "My back used to bother me periodically. Your medicine is wonderful. I have no more trouble."
